est in a particular way, the court will carry out the intention of the parties.[85] Payments of interest by mistake, when no interest was due, are applied as payments on the principal debt at the date of maturity of the obligation.[86]

[§ 122] (4) Several Debts or Notes. Where two or more debts are kept separate and distinct from each other, the law will apply partial payments to the satisfaction first of the interest, then of the principal of the debt first falling due, and, following that, first the interest, then the principal of each succeeding debt in order.[87] But where there is in reality but one debt represented by different notes maturing at different times, the payment should first be applied to the interest due on the whole debt.[88]

[§ 123] G. Rights of Third Persons[89]—1. In General. The exercise of the right of appropriation of payments belongs exclusively to the debtor and creditor and no third person can control or be heard for the purpose of compelling a different appropriation from that agreed upon by them.[90] The rule permitting appropriation by debtor or creditor free from the control of third persons goes on the assumption that payment is being made out of the debtor's property, and will not therefore support an appropriation by debtor or creditor where made with property or the proceeds of property belonging to a third person and without the latter's knowledge or consent.[91] But where the funds for payment are secured from the third person with his knowledge or consent, fraudulently obtained, the creditor's right to appropriate will not be affected thereby, if he himself had no knowledge of the fraud.[92]

[§ 124] 2. Enforceable Rights and Equities—a. In General. If no specific appropriation of payments is made by either party until enforceable rights of third persons holding under the debtor have been created, the creditor cannot so appropriate payments made by the debtor as to affect such rights, if, by a different appropriation, they can be protected.[93] So where the court is called upon to appropriate payments and the equities of third persons intervene, it will apply the payment as may seem reasonable and just.[94] Of course the parties cannot apply a

"There is no privity between an attaching creditor and one who owes his debtor that allows him to direct or have control over the payment of money by that person. The one who makes payment has the right to designate on which debt it shall be applied. If he fail, then the creditor may make application. If both fail, then the law makes application under well known rules. But we know of no authority preventing the creditor and debtor from agreeing among themselves as to the application of payments. The most favorable position the attaching creditor could hold would be one equal to his debtor. If his debtor could not apply the payments as he wished unless the payor failed to designate, how can he have a greater power?" Carey v. Herrick, supra.

[a] An assignee of a mortgagor cannot insist that money of the mortgagor, in the mortgagee's hands, should be used to pay off the mortgage, unless this was clearly contemplated by the parties, and the assignee made his purchase with the understanding that it should be so. Gordon v. Hobart, 10 F. Cas. No. 5,608, 2 Story 243.

[a] Secured debts.—A partnership creditor holding a mortgage of one of payment to an invalid debt to the prejudice of a subsequent creditor.[95]

[§ 125] b. Subsequent Mortgagees or Lienors. Where the payment is made from funds or property subject to a mortgage or other lien, such payment cannot be applied to other debts of the debtor against the objection of mortgagee or lienor.[96] The rule does not apply in the absence of an objection by the mortgagee or lienor to the appropriation as made;[97] nor where it clearly appears that the secured creditor receiving the money paid it in the debtor's behalf to third persons holding claims against the latter, and had no interest in them, and in good faith acted only as the agent of the debtor in the transaction;[98] nor where the person who later becomes the assignee of the mortgage is a stranger thereto at the time the appropriation of the payment is made.[99]

[§ 126] c. Promise to Third Person. The right of the debtor or creditor to appropriate to any debt will not be affected by a promise to a third person made without consideration to appropriate to a particular debt.[1] But where the promise to the third person to appropriate to a particular debt is based on a legal consideration, the rights of debtor or creditor to appropriate are subject to the terms of such agreement.[2]

[§ 127] 3. Effect of Appropriation Once Made. An appropriation by either party cannot afterward be changed so as injuriously to affect the rights of third persons.[3] Nor, in the absence of fraud, can an appropriation once made in accordance with a preëxisting agreement by the creditor and the debtor be afterward changed upon the demand of the third person.[4]

VIII. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, TRIAL, AND REVIEW*

[§ 128] A. In General. Payment is ordinarily a matter of affirmative defense,[5] and as such is ordinarily required to be specifically pleaded.[6]

The defense is a meritorious one,[7] and so long as the merits of a case remain untried, the court will relieve the party who, under misapprehension or want of proper knowledge of his case, has in good faith filed pleadings or made agreements which operate to defeat a full presentation of his rights.[8]

Payment by third person. Satisfaction by one of the partner's separate property as security for half of the debt and a note indorsed by a third party as security for the other part, and payments having been made which are not applied by either debtor or creditor, the court will appropriate them ratably upon both debts. "The defense of payment is new matter and a special affirmative defense." Rountree v. Clanton, 17 Ariz. 107, 109, 149 P 58.

"The rule that payment is an affirmative defense had its origin under the common-law practice in the plea of non assumpsit, and the reason for it was that in assumpsit the allegation in the declaration and the traverse in the plea were in the past tense, and under the rule which excluded all proof not strictly within the issue, no evidence was admissible, except such as had a tendency to show that the defendant never had made the promise. It was never applied in the action of debt, the allegation in that form of action being in the present tense, and under the plea of nil debet any fact tending to show that there was no indebtedness on the part of the defendant was admissible." Lent v. New York, etc., R. Co., 130 N. Y. 504, 510, 29 NE 988.

7. Beals v. Hill, 58 N. H. 61.

8. Beals v. Hill, supra (holding, however, that a defendant is not estopped to set up an assignment of property as a defense of payment by reason of his having obtained a continuance of the action at a former term, upon his affidavit that he was advised by counsel, and believed that his claim for the assignment probably could not be allowed as a set-off, and that, for reasons stated, judgment should not be rendered against him before he had opportunity, in a pending suit on his claim, to obtain a judgment which might be set off against plaintiff's judgment).

*By GILBERT G. FINLEY (§§ 128-175).

two joint tort-feasors[9] or payment by a joint obligor[10] may be pleaded in bar to an action against the other. But payment by a stranger between whom and defendant there is no privity cannot be pleaded by the latter in bar of a suit for his own debt.[11]

Propriety in tort action. It has been said that, since payment is a mode of extinguishing a debt,[12] a plea of payment is not an appropriate answer to an unliquidated demand in tort.[13]

[§ 129] B. Pleading[14]—1. Allegation of Nonpayment—a. Necessity[15]—(1) In General. Nonpayment need not be alleged in the petition, declaration, or complaint,[16] except where failure to pay must be stated as an essential element of the cause of action,[17] as for example, in an action on a contract, the breach of which consists of nonpayment,[18] although such an allegation is not improper.[19]

[§ 130] (2) Where Presumption of Payment Exists. Where there is a presumption of payment from lapse of time, it has been held that facts rebutting such presumption must be alleged.[20]

[§ 131] b. Requisites and Sufficiency. An allegation that defendant "has not paid the said sum of . . . nor any part thereof, but the same sum is . . . still due and wholly unpaid," is sufficient,[21] but an allegation of indebtedness at a time prior never existed.[27] Nor is it necessary to plead a payment admitted in the petition,[28] or where the matter pleaded is a set-off.[29] Payment must be set up by plea or answer and not by demurrer.[30]

[§ 133] (2) Appropriation of Payments. A particular appropriation of payments by a party, where relied upon, must be pleaded,[31] as must objections to appropriation of payments.[32]

[§ 134] (3) Where Presumption of Payment Exists. Where lapse of time is relied on as evidence of payment, there are cases holding that it need not be pleaded,[33] but the general rule is that in such a case payment must be averred as in other cases.[34]

[§ 135] b. Propriety of Pleading Specially. Payment may be pleaded specially, even where it may be shown under the general issue.[35]

[§ 136] c. Nature of Plea.[36] A plea of payment is a plea in bar[37] in the nature of a plea in confession and avoidance,[38] although it is not to be considered a plea in confession and avoidance where it constitutes a denial of the averments of the declaration.[39] Where payment is made after the commencement of the action, and before issue joined, it may be pleaded in bar of the further maintenance of the action,[40] unless it was of the whole debt and costs, in which case it may be pleaded in bar of the action generally.[41] A plea of payment is distinguishable from a plea of set-off[42] or counterclaim.[43]

[§ 137] d. Time To Plead. Payment may be pleaded any time before judgment,[44] but it is too late to plead payment after judgment and an affirmance on appeal.[45] Where payment is made before

[d] Payment of interest when relied on as a defense must be specially pleaded. Junge v. Bowman, 72 Iowa 648, 34 NW 612.

[e] Allegation of nonpayment by plaintiff (1) does not remove requirement that defendant plead payment (Esbensen v. Hover, 3 Colo. A. 467, 33 P 1008; Bernham Chemical, etc., Corp. v. Ship-a-Hoy, 200 App. Div. 399, 193 NYS 372 [mod on other grounds 234 N. Y. 563 mem, 138 NE 447 mem]; Lord v. Graveson, 26 Oh. Cir. [a] Reason for rule.—So the court can adjust the costs, and if defendant prevails, plaintiff gets costs only up to time plea was made. Pemigewasset Bank v. Brackett, 4 N. H. 557.

[b] Payment after suit brought operates not in bar of the action, but only in mitigation of damages, unless it appears that costs accrued to the time of payment have been included in the payment. Farmers' Bank v. Orr, 25 Ind. A. 71, 55 NE 35.

Form of plea after issue joined see infra § 137.

[a] Thus (1) a plea which alleged payment by a sale of merchandise, and also that at the date of the filing of the suit by plaintiff against defendant the items were still due, was a plea of set-off and not of payment. Northington v. Granade, 118 Ga. 584, 45 SE 447. (2) A plea which sought to set off the claim of a third person against plaintiff's claim is a plea of set-off and not of payment. expiration of the time allowed to answer, the plea relates to the time it was interposed, and not to the time the action was commenced.[46] If payment was made after issue joined, it must be pleaded puis darrein continuance.[47]

[§ 138] e. Joinder of Defenses. Subject to the general rules as to joinder of defenses[48] and more particularly of inconsistent defenses,[49] a plea of payment may be joined with other pleas;[50] a defendant pleading part payment may confess as to the residue,[51] or with the plea of part payment he may interpose some other plea as to the remainder.[52] But in such case defendant should specify to what particular part the plea of payment is intended to apply.[53]

[§ 139] f. Part Payment.[54] The general rule is that a plea of part payment of the debt demanded is proper, and, if established, is a good defense pro tanto.[55] Under this rule there are cases, and an action on a judgment has been held to be one of them, where defendant cannot plead in bar payment of part of the amount claimed.[56] The rule is not universal, it being held in some jurisdictions that a partial payment made on or before the day the debt is due may be pleaded,[57] but a partial payment made after the debt is due cannot be pleaded,[58] and in others a plea of part payment is held to be bad,[59] the rule being that the plea must answer the whole of a count, and not a part.[60]

[§ 140] g. Requisites and Sufficiency of Pleadings[61]—(1) Pleas or Answers—(a) In General. The general allegation of payment is ordinarily held sufficient as a plea of payment.[62] However, in a

[a] Receipt and acceptance by creditor is not usually alleged. Breck v. Blanchard, 20 N. H. 323, 51 AmD 222.

[b] Demurrer.—Is good as against a demurrer. Powers v. Bunnell, 121 Minn. 152, 140 NW 748.

[c] Denial of the alleged nonpayment, and an averment of payment of the sums sued for, are in effect the same defense differently stated. Turner v. Ward, 201 Ky. 295, 256 SW 389.

[d] Answers held sufficient to put payment in issue.—(1) Merrill v. Randall, 22 Ill. 227. (2) Denial that such sum has never been paid by defendant to plaintiff, or that it is due or payable, together with allegations showing part payment. Sprigg v. Barber, 122 Cal. 573, 55 P 419. (3) Allegation that intestate, before maturity and for value, transferred and delivered such note to defendant is in effect a plea of payment. Hays v. Dickey, 67 Ark. 169, 53 SW 887. (4) The claim set up in plaintiff's complaint has been fully paid before the commencement of this suit. Cranor v. Winters, 75 Ind. 301. (5) That defendant has paid the debt or demand upon which this suit is brought, and that it was paid before the commencement of the action. Cooledge v. McArdle, 211 Ala. 205, 100 S 145 (plea practically in code form). (6) Such work, labor, and services were more than fully paid for, settled, and satisfied prior to the commencement of this action. Lappin v. Martin, 71 Mont. 233, 228 P 763. (7) He has paid the same in full. Goss v. Calkins, 164 Mass. 546, 42 NE 96. (8) The same has been fully paid. Swett v. Southworth, 125 Mass. 417.

[e] Pleas held insufficient.—(1) Plea, averring payment of contract price, but not for extra work or work outside of contract, was insufficient to set up plea of payment to the claim for extra work. Alabama Jail, etc., Co. v. Marion County, 145 Ala. 684, 40 S 100. (2) Allegation that defendant has advanced a stated sum to plaintiff does not amount to a plea of payment. Dickson v. Dickson, 32 La. Ann. 272. (3) That the sum due has been substantially, if not wholly, paid. Hardin County v. Weels, 108 Iowa 174, 78 NW 908 (action on subscription). (4) Denial that any sum is due on notes is not allegation of payment. Rodger v. Bliss, 130 Misc. 168, 223 few states more specific allegations are required.[63] In some, payments must be pleaded with sufficient certainty and particularity as to give plaintiff notice of their nature;[64] in others a bill of particulars must be filed with the plea;[65] and in others the particulars thereof must be furnished if properly demanded;[66] but, if the plea is not properly objected to, it is sufficient,[67] and in determining its sufficiency the whole pleading must be read together.[68] Where the averment of facts substantially sets up a plea of payment, it may be so considered.[69]

[§ 141] (b) Denial of Nonpayment or Indebtedness. Where plaintiff, in the statement of his cause of action, alleges nonpayment, a denial of such allegation is proper,[70] although the contrary has also been held;[71] but it is not necessary where payment is affirmatively alleged.[72] Such a denial alone, however, has been held insufficient to put payment in issue,[73] unless nonpayment is a necessary allegation of the complaint.[74] Nor can the negative averment of nonpayment ordinarily be put in issue by a mere general denial.[75] A denial of indebtedness has been held not to be an allegation of payment,[76] but only a denial of a legal conclusion.[77]

[§ 142] (c) Allegations of Matters of Evidence. It is not sufficient merely to plead evidence going to show payment;[78] in fact, circumstances which are mere evidence of the fact of payment should not ordinarily be alleged,[79] although the inclusion of such allegations, where coupled with an averment of payment, does not make the plea demurrable.[80] But where the plea sets forth evidence from which it may be inferred that the payments were less than the amount due, it is deficient.[81]

[§ 143] (d) Certainty and Particularity[82]—aa. In General. The plea of payment must aver payment of the demand in suit,[83] and subject to the rules applicable to pleadings generally[84] it has been held that it must answer the entire declaration or count to which it is pleaded.[85] Although in a few states the contrary is held,[86] as a general rule the NYS 401. (5) Plea that plaintiffs received defendant's notes on account of such debt and cashed them, thus reimbursing themselves and having the alleged indebtedness paid in full, does not sufficiently allege payment. Blum v. Jurick, 83 Misc. 116, 144 NYS 822.

[b] In England, on a count for money had and received, a plea that plaintiff requested him to send the sum of money by post and he did so was held bad on special demurrer. Kington v. Kington, 11 M. & W. 233, 152 Reprint 789.

64. Ward v. Acklen, 9 La. Ann. 443.

[a] Thus a plea specifying the amounts and names of parties to whom payments have been made is sufficiently explicit. Ward v. Acklen, 9 La. Ann. 443.

[c] In Texas (1) it is only required that payment be so plainly and particularly described in the plea as to give plaintiff full notice of the character thereof. Brown v. Rash, 45 Tex. Civ. A. 603, 101 SW 1041 (general plea sufficient on second trial of that issue); Wooley v. Bell, (Civ. A.) 68 SW 71. (2) Plea of payment must be definite and certain. Nugent v. Martin, 1 Tex. A. Civ. Eng.—Page v. Meek, 3 B. & S. 259, 113 ECL 259, 122 Reprint 98.

[a] Rules of equity pleading do not require defense of payment to be set forth according to any particular form; all that is required is for the pleader to set forth the facts in a concise and intelligent manner. Bausman v. Denny, 73 Fed. 69 [rev on other grounds 79 Fed. 172, 24 CCA 473 (app dism 172 U. S. 644 mem, 19 SCt 878 mem, 43 L. ed. 1182 mem)].

[b] Thus (1) a plea that defendant paid plaintiff two sums of money, stating dates and amounts, which extinguished the note, is sufficient. Joy v. Cooley, 19 Mo. 645. (2) That defendant paid plaintiff a portion of the demand and deposited the balance with the trustee until controversy between the parties should be adjusted is sufficient. Page v. Meek, 3 B. & S. 259, 113 ECL 259, 122 Reprint 98. (3) An allegation that plaintiff's intestate for value and before maturity transferred the note to defendant is a substantial plea of payment. 86. See cases infra this note.

[a] In Georgia (1) the plea should allege when, how, and to whom the payment was made. Rentz Drug Co. v. Bishop-Babcock Co., 30 Ga. A. 391, 118 SE 414; Thompson v. Carrollton Bank, 29 Ga. A. 520, 116 SE 39; Armour Fertilizer Works v. Dwight, 22 Ga. A. 144, 95 SE 746; Lott v. Banks, 21 Ga. A. 246, 94 SE 322; Epstein v. Thomas, 15 Ga. A. 741, 84 SE 201; Ginn v. Carithers, 14 Ga. (2) A plea without such allegations, although subject to special demurrer, is good as against an oral motion to strike or general demurrer. Thompson v. Carrollton Bank, 29 Ga. A. 520, 116 SE 39; Epstein v. Thomas, 15 Ga. A. 741, 84 SE 201; Netherland v. Louisville First Nat. Bank, 11 Ga. A. 110, 74 SE 849; Prince v. Cochran, 10 Ga. A. 495, 73 SE 693. See Wortham v. Sinclair, 98 Ga. 173, 25 SE 414 (motion to strike deficient in that it failed to point out defects). (3) A plea is sufficient where satisfactory excuse is made for failure specifically to allege time, place, amounts, and to whom payments were made. Palmer v. Bradshaw, (A.) 146 SE 642 plea need not allege the amount paid,[87] the place of payment,[88] or the exact date of payment;[89] nor state by whom[90] or to whom[91] the payment was made. However, a plea of payment should state whether payment was made before or after commencement of the action.[92]

[§ 144] bb. Account or Bill of Particulars.[93] As a general rule a plea of payment need not include an account or a bill of items or particulars.[94] Under proper circumstances, however, a bill of particulars may be required.[95] If plaintiff, under the circumstances of the case, has better knowledge of the matter than defendant so pleading payment generally, the latter will not be required to file a bill of particulars.[96] In some jurisdictions, it must be furnished if demanded,[97] and in others it is required under a general plea of payment,[98] or a plea setting up the general issue.[99]

[§ 145] (e) Consistency. The plea should not be inconsistent in itself,[1] as by denying indebtedness.[2]

[§ 146] (f) Conclusion of Plea.[3] The general rule at common law is that, where the plea of payment introduces new matter, it should conclude with a verification and not "to the country,"[4] but where it does not introduce new matter, but is pleaded by

(where no books were kept); Dania Cash Stores v. Zaring, 38 Ga. A. 427, 144 SE 132 (where canceled checks and stubs evidencing payments were lost in storm). (4) A plea of partial payment which sets forth neither the time, place, nor amount of payment is insufficient. Thomas v. Clarkson, 125 Ga. 72, 54 SE 77, 6 LRANS 658. (5) A plea which fails to state any time as to the payments is demurrable. O'Neal v. Phillips, 83 Ga. 556, 10 SE 352. (6) The plea should allege the time and place of payment. Scott v. Anderson, 29 Ga. A. 438, 115 SE 917.

[b] In Alabama, in view of the code, in a suit brought by one person for the use of another, a plea of payment which does not allege a payment to the beneficial plaintiff or a payment to the person holding the legal title, before the person holding the beneficial interest acquired his right, is bad. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Jurey, 111 U. S. 584, 4 SCt 566, 28 L. ed. 527.

way of traverse, so as to form an issue, it should conclude "to the country."[5] However, in some jurisdictions the conclusion has been held to be a matter merely of form which, although improper, will not be allowed to affect the merits of the case.[6]

[§ 147] (g) Pleas of Part Payment.[7] Part payment should not be pleaded as a complete defense, for, if it commences as an answer to the whole action but is to part only, it will be held bad on demurrer;[8] but where the total of different partial payments is sufficient to discharge plaintiff's demand, they should be pleaded in bar.[9]

Smaller sum in discharge of greater. A plea of payment of a smaller sum in discharge of a greater one is bad,[10] unless a sufficient consideration for giving up the residue is alleged.[11]

[§ 148] (h) Pleas of Payment Other than by Money.[12] Where the plea is payment in property[13] or by a commercial instrument,[14] acceptance thereof by the creditor as payment in satisfaction and discharge of the debt sued on should be alleged; or, in the latter case, that the instrument has been paid,[15] or is an outstanding obligation in the hands of a third person.[16] It is not necessary to allege that the instrument was negotiable,[17] and a plea of payment by the transfer of notes and accounts need not set them out.[18] A plea which shows that a portion of the items claimed to have been accepted in payment were received prior to the execution of the contract sued on is not subject to exception in its entirety,[19] although it has been held that a plea averring that payment has been actually made in any manner is sufficient.[20] But in considering this proposition, the authorities which hold broadly that evidence of a delivery of property is admissible under a general plea of payment in an action on a contract to pay money must be considered.[21]

Payment in suspension. A plea of the delivery and receipt of a bill of exchange for, and on account of, and in payment and discharge of, a debt, and the causes of action in respect thereof, has been held a plea of suspension only, and not one in absolute payment and extinction of the debt.[22]

[§ 149] (i) Pleading Payment by Third Person.[23] It is proper to allege payment on information and belief where payment was made by an agent[24] or other person.[25]

[§ 150] (j) Pleading Payment to Assignor or Third Person.[26] A plea of payment to another than the creditor must allege that the third party was authorized to receive the payment.[27] In an action by the assignee of a debt, if payment to the assignor is pleaded, it must be averred that payment was made before notice of the assignment.[28]

[§ 151] (k) Pleading Payment by or as Garnishee.[29] A plea of payment by a garnishee is a good plea of payment.[30] A plea of payment as garnishee should show that defendant answered on oath, admitted his indebtedness, and that the debt then

"The proper conclusion of a plea of payment must logically depend upon what allegations of non-payment, if any, were necessary in the declaration. If a general allegation of non-payment covering not only non-payment when the debt became due, but also non-payment since the debt became due must be alleged in the declaration, a general plea of payment which expressly denies this general allegation of non-payment must necessarily conclude to the country." acknowledged was the debt in controversy.[31] It is sufficient if it alleges that the court rendering the judgment had jurisdiction of the garnishment proceedings.[32]

[§ 152] (1) Pleading Presumption of Payment.[33] Where a party intends to rely on the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time, he must plead payment;[34] it is not necessary specially to plead the defense of presumption of payment.[35] A mere statement of the facts from which the presumption is claimed to arise[36] or a plea of limitations is not sufficient.[37]

[§ 153] (2) Affidavits of Defense.[38] In those states where an affidavit of defense is interposed,[39] it seems that more particularity is required than in ordinary pleas, it being held that all the circumstances of the alleged payment must be set forth with certainty and particularity and not generally and inferentially.[40] It is not sufficient to allege that the debt has been paid and that nothing is owing.[41] The affidavit must distinctly allege the fact of payment,[42] and state the time,[43] amount,[44] manner of payment,[45] and the persons to whom,[46] by whom,[47] and on whose account,[48] it was made. It is not enough to aver that the debtor has a receipt for money without alleging that he made payment, or that it was made for him.[49] If payment other than in money, as by note, bill, check, or other property, is alleged, it must be further stated either that it was accepted by the creditor as payment,[50] or, if a commercial instrument, that it has been paid,[51] or is an outstanding obligation in the hands of another.[52] It has been held sufficient where certain notes sued on were given as part of a running account to allege payment of plaintiff's account in a general way.[53]

[§ 154] 3. Replication or Reply[54]—a. In General. The general rule seems to be that, if nonpayment was a necessary allegation in the complaint, a reply traversing the allegation of payment need not be made,[55] and the parties may proceed to trial without the formal addition of a similiter.[56] But if the plea of payment sets up new matter in answer to the complaint, plaintiff must file a replication thereto,[57] except in those states where a replication is dispensed with by statute;[58] and under this rule must be considered the states which require a reply, even though nonpayment is a necessary allegation in the complaint,[59] the theory being that a plea of payment always sets up new matter.[60] As a general rule, plaintiff by unnecessarily pleading nonpayment in his complaint does not relieve himself from the necessity of making a reply,[61] although in a few states the rule seems to be that, where the complaint alleges nonpayment and the answer avers payment, no reply is necessary, even though the allegation of nonpayment was not required.[62]

Time to file replication. It has been held proper to permit a nunc pro tunc entry of a reply even after trial.[63]

Non est factum. Plaintiff need not plead non est factum in order to attack a receipt set up in support of a plea of payment.[64]

[§ 155] b. To Part Payment. Where payment is pleaded to part of the demand and nothing as to the remainder, it has been said that plaintiff must take judgment by nil dicit for the balance ignored,[65] and as to the part answered he may enter a nolle prosequi if he is satisfied that it is correct,[66] or he may reply and put that in issue.[67] It has been held, however, that a plaintiff may reply to a plea of part payment without taking judgment for the part of the demand unanswered.[68]

[§ 156] c. Sufficiency.[69] In accordance with the general rules governing the sufficiency of replications in civil actions in general,[70] a reply to a plea of payment should deny the material averments therein.[71] Thus a reply which sets up the invalidity of the medium of payment without denying an averment that plaintiff received par value for the medium is insufficient.[72] It should be confined to matters set forth in the plea;[73] so a reply is bad which joins issue on matter stated only in the bill of particulars.[74] If one of several replications to a plea of payment is good, it is sufficient to sustain the action as against such defense.[75]

[a] Reasons for rule.—(1) The affirmative averment of payment is in effect a denial of the averment of nonpayment in the complaint. Logan County Nat. Bank v. Barclay, 104 Ky. 97, 46 SW 675, 20 KyL 773; Ermert v. Dietz, 44 SW 138, 19 KyL 1639; Douglass v. Central Land Co., 12 W. Va. 502. (2) The answer is not new matter requiring a reply, but merely a proper mode of controverting an allegation of the complaint. McArdle v. McArdle, 12 Minn. 98. (3) Plea of payment is in effect a general denial. Isola v. Soranti, 47 Nev. 365, 222 P 796.

[b] In California (1) early cases held a reply to a plea of payment unnecessary where nonpayment was a necessary allegation of the complaint. Frisch v. Caler, 21 Cal. 71. (2) Under the code no reply is allowed and all new matter in the answer is considered controverted. Code Civ. Proc. § 462.

73. Vanzant v. Shelton, 40 Miss. 332.

74. Vanzant v. Shelton, supra.

75. Hurd v. Earl, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 39.

Reference to answer. A reply to a paragraph of the answer pleading payment cannot refer for facts to another paragraph of the answer.[76]

Verification. A replication to a plea of payment setting up a receipt from plaintiff, which alleges fraud or mistake in the receipt is good without being supported by affidavit.[77] But a replication to a plea of payment on the written order of plaintiff which denies payment but does not question the execution of the order, and is not supported by oath or affirmation, is not sufficient.[78]

Fraud. A reply to a plea of payment, which relies on a note executed by plaintiff to a third person and assigned to defendant, may allege that the assignment was obtained by fraud,[79] and a reply alleging that a receipt was given for a specified purpose different than that for which the plea alleged is sufficient;[80] but a reply that an exchange has been made through fraud is not sufficient.[81]

[§ 157] 4. Motions and Demurrers.[82] As a general rule defects in a plea of payment cannot be attacked by a general demurrer,[83] so a plea of payment will be held good on general demurrer, even though it is pleaded with other matter which is improper.[84] It is variously required in the different jurisdictions that defects in the plea must be attacked by special demurrer,[85] by motion to make more specific,[86] or by special exceptions;[87] so a plea of part payment with a prayer for judgment has been held subject to a special, but not a general, demurrer.[88] It has been held error to strike a plea substantially setting up the defense of payment because the attorney called it a "plea in compensation."[89]

Denials in an affirmative defense of full payment obscure and weaken the plea, and are properly excised.[90]

Complaint. If nonpayment is a necessary allegation of the complaint,[91] the failure to allege it may be reached by a general demurrer;[92] but if it is improperly or defectively stated, the defect can be reached only by a special demurrer.[93]

[§ 158] 5. Amendments. A plea of payment which does not contain the requisite clearness and precision, but is not altogether insufficient, may be amended,[94] but where the plea is wholly insufficient, it may not be.[95]

[§ 159] 6. Construction and Operation of Pleadings—a. In General. The rules relating to the construction and operation of pleadings in civil actions in general[96] control the construction and operation of particular allegations in the complaint,[97] answer,[98] or reply.[99] Specific statements of fact in regard to payment will control a general allegation.[1] In conformity with the rule that a pleading in matters of substance is to be construed most strongly against the pleader,[2] if an answer to which there is no replication may be construed to contain either of two defenses, one a defense which requires a reply, and the other payment which does not, it will be construed as setting up the defense of payment.[3] It has been held that, if nonpayment is a necessary allegation of the complaint,[4] the affirmative allegation of payment serves only as notice that the issue of nonpayment is actually to be raised.[5]

[§ 160] b. Plea as Dispensing with Proof of Cause of Action. The plea of payment does not put in issue the debtor's original legal liability.[6] It admits the cause of action and that the debt once existed,[7] so as to put the burden of proof on the party pleading payment.[8]

[§ 161] 7. Issues, Proof, and Variance[9]—a. In General. Payment is a material issue,[10] and material matters relating to the payment, alleged by a party, must be proved by him.[11] If an issue of payment is not raised by the pleadings it should not be submitted to the jury.[12] The validity of a claim which defendant has against plaintiff is immaterial under the issue of whether it was agreed to apply it in payment of plaintiff's claim.[13]

[§ 162] b. Evidence Admissible under Pleadings[14]—(1) In General. The general rule is that, where there is no plea of payment, evidence thereof is not admissible.[15] However, this rule is subject to various exceptions and modifications.[16]

A receipt in full may be introduced in evidence under a plea denying the agreement to pay, to show the improbability that such an agreement existed prior to the date of such receipt.[17]

[§ 163] (2) Under Plea of Payment[18]—(a) In General. Under a general plea of payment evidence of a discharge of the obligation in money may be shown.[19] The rule, which it has been asserted formerly existed,[20] that, under a simple plea of payment, payment in money or its equivalent only can be shown, still prevails in some jurisdictions.[21] However, the general rule now seems to be that, under a general plea of payment, while the pleader cannot give evidence tending to disprove the cause of action as to which payment is alleged,[22] subject to the general rules as to competency, materiality, and relevancy,[23] any matter may be given in evidence which tends to show payment.[24] Evidence of the amount paid and the time and circumstances of its

Oh.—Brown v. Gimm, 10 Oh. Cir. Dec. 538.

[a] All the facts and circumstances may be shown to prove payment. Hollander v. Fletcher, 62 Ind. A. 149, 112 NE 847.

[b] In Pennsylvania (1) evidence of an equitable payment or defense as distinguished from direct payment is admissible only where the plea of payment is with leave to introduce an equitable defense, or there is notice of particulars. Lovegrove v. Christman, 164 Pa. 390, 30 A 385; Smaltz v. Ryan, 112 Pa. 423, 3 A 772; Steiner v. Erie Dime Sav., etc., Co., 98 Pa. 591; Covely v. Fox, 11 Pa. 171; Erwin v. Leibert, 5 Watts & S. 103. (2) For instance, the acceptance of a collateral security which is lost through the laches of the creditor is not admissible under the naked plea of payment. Covely v. Fox, supra. (3) Under the plea of payment with payment is admissible under the general allegation of payment,[25] as is evidence to show that payment is presumed from lapse of time.[26] Where the plea of payment is special rather than general, evidence is inadmissible which does not conform strictly to the pleadings.[27] In an action on account the plea of payment permits plaintiff to introduce evidence of the amount owed.[28]

A receipt in support of a plea of payment may be attacked without a plea of non est factum.[29]

A plea by an intervener setting up that defendant had fully discharged the note is sufficient to admit evidence of satisfaction,[30] but defendant cannot be aided beyond the effect of his own plea.[31]

[§ 164] (b) Payment Other than in Money.[32] In the majority of states under the general plea of payment, evidence of payment in other things than money is admissible,[33] as by chattels,[34] realty,[35] choses in action,[36] accounts,[37] or any arrangement which, according to the agreement of the parties, operated to discharge the debt.[38] Likewise evidence that plaintiff has received the amount of collaterals placed in his hands,[39] or has become chargeable therewith, is admissible,[40] although in the latter case there is authority to the contrary.[41] But if an agreement to accept a commodity other than money is alleged, evidence of its delivery is not admissible in the absence of an averment of its acceptance or of consideration for the agreement.[42] Where the plea is payment by the giving of a note, the debtor may show the custom of the creditor in receiving notes to support his contention that the note was proper notice, any equity which tends to defeat the plaintiff's action may be given in evidence. Smaltz v. Ryan, supra; Loose v. Loose, 36 Pa. 538. (4) Payment with leave and with notice of special matter admits anything which proves fraud, mistake, want or failure of consideration, and shows that ex æquo et bono, a part or whole of the amount claimed should not be recovered. Latapee v. Pecholier, 14 F. Cas. No. 8,101, 2 Wash. C. C. 180; Uhler v. Sanderson, 38 Pa. 128. (5) So defendant may set up deductions for foreman's wages to show that he has paid all plaintiff is entitled to under contract (Emrey v. Regar, 54 Pa. Super. 67), (6) or show an assignment to plaintiff as collateral security of the note of a third party which has been paid (Bailey v. Bailey, 14 Serg. & R. 195). (7) But evidence of the pendency of an attachment against the payee of the note, and served on defendants as garnishees, cannot be given. Adams v. Avery, 2 Pittsb. 77.

Specific matters admissible in evidence see infra § 164.

[a] Manner of payment is admissible under allegation of payment. Wortman v. Young, (Tex. Civ. A.) 221 SW 660.

[b] Under plea of payment in Confederate money, evidence that the military power of the Confederate states predominated at the time and place of payment, or that the money was voluntarily accepted in full satisfaction is admissible. Williams v. Godsay, 8 Ky. Op. 210.

accepted as payment.[43] But a duebill payable in chattels at a specified place is not admissible to show payment on a cash sale at a different place;[44] nor is evidence admissible that plaintiff by laches in presentment and note of a check given for a debt has made it his own and discharged defendants.[45] In a few jurisdictions evidence of payment other than in money is not admissible unless the substantive facts of the agreement under which the commodity was accepted in payment are pleaded.[46]

[§ 165] (c) Application of Particular Funds. Under plea of payment evidence of application of particular funds to the discharge of the debt is admissible,[47] and objections to appropriations of payments may be made;[48] so evidence of erroneous application of payments is admissible,[49] as is evidence to show that the payment was on a debt other than the one sued on.[50] Likewise evidence explaining a letter which is seemingly an admission against interest may be introduced.[51]

[§ 166] (d) Payment to Person Other than Creditor.[52] Payment to an agent of plaintiff,[53] or to the assignor,[54] or to a deputy sheriff on a capias ad satisfaciendum,[55] or to a third person pursuant to an agreement with the creditor,[56] is admissible under a general plea of payment. Plaintiff may show that a receipt offered was not given by his agent.[57]

[§ 167] (e) Payment by Another Person. Where payment is alleged to have been made by one person, evidence that it was made by another is inadmissible,[58] and it has been held that evidence of payment by a party other than defendant is not admissible unless such fact is averred in the answer.[59] It has been held, however, that under a plea of payment generally payment by an agent may be proved.[60]

[§ 168] (f) Payment after Suit Brought. Evidence of payment made after issue joined is not admissible[61] in the absence of a supplemental pleading setting up such payment.[62]

[§ 169] (g) Payment after Breach. Where payment on the day the debt became due is pleaded, evidence of payment after the date is not admissible.[63]

[§ 170] (h) Other Affirmative Defenses. Under a general plea of payment evidence is not ordinarily admissible of an accord and satisfaction,[64] or of any special arrangement growing out of independent contracts,[65] or of a set-off,[66] or a counterclaim,[67] or equitable recoupment,[68] or a gift,[69] or novation,[70] or a discharge of another jointly liable,[71] or a discharge by parol of a sealed instrument;[72] nor is evidence admissible of the discontinuance of the suit,[73] or of a foreign attachment in an action of debt against the garnishee,[74] or evidence to excuse nonpayment.[75] It has been held, however, that in chancery pleading an allegation of payment may be sustained by proof of satisfaction of the demand in any way, as by set-off, accord and satisfaction, etc.[76]

[§ 171] (i) Partial Payment. Although it was said in a number of early cases that evidence of part payment could not be admitted under a plea of full payment,[77] the rule now seems well settled that evidence of partial payment is admissible as a defense pro tanto.[78]

[§ 172] (3) Under General Issue or General Denial—(a) At Common Law. As has been elsewhere stated, payment may, at common law, be shown under the general issue in assumpsit[79] and debt.[80] In some jurisdictions the rule has been modified so as to allow evidence of payment under a plea of the general issue with notice of payment,[81] or with a brief statement of facts.[82] Where evidence of payment is admissible, plaintiff may introduce evidence to show that the payments were made on demands other than those sued on.[83]

Part payments. In some jurisdictions evidence of partial payment is admissible under the general issue,[84] and in others it is not,[85] unless it is specially pleaded or described in an account filed with the plea.[86]

Payment after suit brought cannot be shown unless pleaded,[87] but if a general payment is relied upon evidence of payment may be introduced without a bill of particulars being filed.[88]

[§ 173] (b) Under the Codes. In the code states, as a general rule, evidence of payment is not admissible under a general denial,[89] but in cases in which nonpayment is a necessary allegation of the complaint,[90] evidence of payment is admissible under a general denial,[91] although not admissible under a general denial where the allegation of nonpayment

was unnecessary.[92] This rule is not universal, however, it being held in certain states that under a general denial of a negative averment of nonpayment, evidence of payment is not admissible, whether such allegation was necessary or not,[93] and in at least one jurisdiction, evidence of payment is admissible under a general denial where the complaint merely alleges the indebtedness in general terms,[94] but not where particulars of the claim are stated.[95] It has been held that, where suit is brought to recover a balance alleged to be due after deducting certain stated payments, defendant may prove other payments under a general denial,[96] and that, where plaintiff declares generally upon a balance due, both sides of the account are open upon the general issue;[97] and other cases have held that in a suit for a balance due above all payments made, no payment being specified, evidence of payments is admissible under a general denial,[98] but where plaintiff alleges a specific amount as originally due and admits partial payments thereon, payments other than those admitted must be specially pleaded if they are to be relied upon.[99] Also, under a general denial, evidence is admissible to show that no indebtedness to plaintiff ever existed on the cause alleged.[1]

Evidence of payment by a third person is not admissible under a general denial.[2]

After suit brought. In jurisdictions where evidence of payment is admissible under a general denial, evidence of payment after the commencement of the action is not admissible.[3]

[§ 174] (4) Under Replication and Subsequent Pleadings. The rule in code states,[4] that evidence of payment is not admissible under a general denial, applies where the general denial is contained in a reply.[5] So evidence that payment was accepted under duress is inadmissible under a general denial of payment in a reply.[6]

[§ 175] c. Variance.[7] The evidence must correspond with the allegations in the pleadings,[8] and payment must be proved as alleged in the pleadings.[9] So the proof as to payments must be within, and correspond with, the bill of particulars.[10] An immaterial variance, however, may be disregarded.[11] An averment of payment is not supported by proof

[a] Reason for rule.—"It is an affirmative fact, which must be proved by the party alleging it." Montgomery First Nat. Bank v. Montgomery Cotton Mfg. Co., 211 Ala. 551, 555, 101 S 186.

[b] Defense amounting to claim of payment.—Where defendant in replevin alleged that live stock loaned to him was subsequently given to him for certain services, the defense was practically that of payment, and the burden of proving it was on defendant. Stewart v. Graham, 93 Miss. 251, 46 S 245.

frequent applications of this rule are found in actions on obligations for the payment of money, in which it is held that the fact of payment is an affirmative defense,[22] and that proof of nonpayment is not necessary to establish a cause of action,[23] even though a formal allegation of nonpayment is included in the bill, petition, or complaint.[24] This rule has been applied in a great variety of actions including actions in assumpsit;[25] actions in trover;[26] actions of replevin;[27] actions for accounting;[28] actions on accounts,[29] bills or notes,[30] bonds,[31] money judgments,[32] and claims against estates of decedents;[33] actions for money lent,[34] money had and received,[35] services rendered,[36] work done under contract,[37] board,[38] rent,[39] and goods sold and delivered;[40] actions by executors or administrators on debts alleged to be due to decedent;[41] actions to enforce vendors' liens,[42] me-

[c] A defendant's admission of allegations of the complaint showing that an indebtedness to plaintiff has existed casts upon him the burden of proving payment. Janeway v. Long Beach Paper, etc., Co., 190 Cal. 150, 211 P 6.

[d] Payment by entry of debits or credits.—One claiming that payment had been effected by the satisfaction of cross demands has the burden of proving such fact. Hill v. Roberts, 86 Ala. 523, 6 S 39.

[e] Where a credit is indorsed on the instrument sued on, the burden of proving it as a payment is nevertheless on the debtor unless the indorsement is in the handwriting of the creditor. Erhart v. Dietrich, 118 Mo. 418, 24 SW 188.

[f] Reply setting out mistake in receipt.—"Where a plaintiff pleads an indebtedness and the defendant alleges payment of it and sets out a receipt in full given by plaintiff and a letter acknowledging full payment of the indebtedness, and the plaintiff in turn replies that the receipt was given and the letter written through a mistake, and that payment had not in fact been made, the burden of proof rests upon the defendant and this burden is not shifted or affected by the affirmative allegations of plaintiff that a mistake had been made in giving the receipt and in writing the letter acknowledging payment." Illinois Steel Bridge Co. v. Wayland, 107 Kan. 532, 192 P 752. Contradiction of receipt generally see supra §§ 78–83.

[a] Where a plaintiff assumes the burden of proving nonpayment, he cannot invoke a rule of court as to affirmative defenses. Parker v. Baldwin, 216 Mich. 472, 185 NW 746.

[b] Plea not amounting to plea of payment.—Where an attorney brought suit, alleging that the defendants were indebted to him for professional services rendered, and the defendants pleaded the general issue, and further, that plaintiff was employed by their father to render the services, this was not a plea of payment, but was an amplification of the plea of the general issue, and there was no error in instructing the jury that the burden was on the plaintiff to make out his case by a preponderance of evidence. Wimpy v. Gaskill, 76 Ga. 41.

[a] Misleading instruction.—Where the sole issue is whether the note in suit has been paid, a charge that plaintiff must establish his case by a preponderance of evidence is erroneous, as putting on plaintiff the burden of proving nonpayment. Grant v. Roberts, (Tex. Civ. A.) 38 SW 650.

[b] In case of a conditional sale of property, title to remain in the seller until the price is paid, in replevin by the seller to recover the possession of the property, he is not required to show nonpayment. Powell v. Wallace, 44 Kan. 656, 25 P 42.

[c] Where a debt is payable in installments, proof of the payment of the first two installments does not cast on the creditor the burden of proving nonpayment of the third installment. McCurdy v. Middleton, 82 Ala. 131, 2 S 721.

[d] Assumption of burden by plaintiff.—In an action against a bank for the amount of a draft deposited by a customer, where plaintiff, when proving his side of the case, testifies that he never received the money for the draft, he takes upon himself the burden of showing prima facie that the draft had not been paid. Goff v. Stoughton State Bank, 78 Wis. 106, 47 NW 190, 9 LRA 859.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) In replevin for timber alleged to have been wrongfully cut and removed from plaintiff's land, defendant has the burden of proving payment by him for the timber cut. Randleman v. Taylor, 94 Ark. 511, 127 SW 723, 140 AmSR 141. (2) In replevin to recover property alleged to have been turned over to plaintiff in payment of a debt, defendant, claiming that the debt had been paid, had the burden of proving payment. Gravert v. 42. Tonn v. Pier, 82 N. J. Eq. 422, 89 A 510.

[a] Payment recited in deed not made.—Where, in a suit to enforce a vendor's lien, it is admitted that payment of the purchase money, although recited in the deed, was not made at the time of the delivery of the deed, the burden of proving payment subsequent thereto is on the defendant. Tonn v. Pier, 82 N. J. Eq.

chanics' liens,[43] and contracts of sale;[44] actions to foreclose mortgages or deeds of trust;[45] actions to recover money fraudulently obtained;[46] actions upon lost instruments;[47] an action upon a promise made to a third person for plaintiff's benefit;[48] an action for breach of an agreement to pay an indebtedness of plaintiff to a third person;[49] and an action against the personal representatives of a decedent on an alleged promise of decedent to make payment after his death.[50] The rule applies also to impose upon a plaintiff, who has pleaded payment as a ground for the relief which he seeks, the burden of proving such payment.[51]

Where the debtor has introduced some evidence of payment, the burden of going forward with the evidence, as distinct from the general burden of proof, shifts to the creditor who is then under the duty of producing some evidence to show nonpayment.[52]

Where a transaction, on its face, constitutes a payment, the burden of proving the contrary is on the creditor.[53]

As against a person other than the debtor, the burden of proving nonpayment of a debt is on the creditor.[54]

A distinction has been drawn between the question of payment when a debt was contracted or at its maturity and payment after a breach, to the effect that plaintiff suing for a debt has the burden of proving that the debt was not paid when contracted or at maturity,[55] but that payment after a breach is new matter to be specially pleaded as to which the burden of proof rests on defendant.[56]

[§ 177] 2. Nonpayment as Element of Cause of Action. Where plaintiff's cause of action involves more than a simple obligation for the payment of money as to which payment is an affirmative defense,[57] so that the fact of nonpayment is an essential element of the cause of action, the burden of proving nonpayment, if plaintiff's allegation thereof is denied, rests on plaintiff.[58]

[§ 178] 3. Nonpayment as Element of Defense. Where nonpayment is set up as an affirmative defense to an action, defendant has the burden of proving it.[59]

[§ 179] 4. Matter in Avoidance of Plea of Payment. Where payment is alleged as a defense and a creditor sets up new matter in avoidance of such defense, the burden of proof as to such new matter rests on him.[60]

N. Y.—Cochran v. Reich, 91 Hun 440, 36 NYS 233, 25 NYCivProc 147, 2 NYAnnCas 313.

"Where the non-payment of a sum of money is a fact upon which plaintiff bases a cause of action for the recovery of a separate and distinct sum of money, the burden of pleading and proving non-payment of the first-mentioned sum rests on the plaintiff, and the fact of non-payment is put in issue by a denial." Altman v. Bungay, 161 App. Div. 583, 585, 146 NYS 949.

[a] "When the action is not upon contract for the payment of money, but is upon an obligation created by operation of law, or is for the enforcement of a lien where non-payment of the amount secured is part of the cause of action, it is necessary both to allege and prove the fact of non-payment." Conkling v. Weatherwax, 181 N. Y. 258, 268, 73 NE 1028, 2 AnnCas 740.

[b] Pay or return sale.—Where property was sold under an agreement requiring the buyer to pay for it or return it on or before a certain date, and after such date the seller brought replevin to recover the article, the burden was upon him to prove nonpayment, since under such circumstances nonpayment was an essential element of his right to recover and not an affirmative defense. Miller v. Baer, 189 NYS 149.

[c] Contract to pay on demand.—In an action for breach of a contract to pay on demand, nonpayment is a constituent of the right of recovery and consequently plaintiff has the burden of proving nonpayment. Smith v. State Bank, 61 Misc. 647, 114 NYS 56.

[§ 180] 5. Time of Payment. Where the time when a payment was made is material, the burden of proving such time rests on the payor.[61]

[§ 181] 6. Place of Payment. Where a contract is silent as to the place of payment, the burden of proof to show that a place other than the place of business or residence of the party to be paid was agreed on is on the party by whom the money is to be paid.[62]

[§ 182] 7. Medium of Payment. Where a contract calls for a payment of a certain amount, the burden is on the debtor, if he so claims, to prove that payment was to be made in a currency other than the lawful currency of the country.[63] Where a creditor claims that money which was received by him in payment is counterfeit, the burden is on him to prove this fact.[64]

[§ 183] 8. Payment Otherwise than in Money. Where a debtor claims that payment was effected by the transfer to the creditor of something other than money, the burden rests on him to show that the creditor accepted the same as payment,[65] or in the case of transfer of an obligation for the payment of money, that the obligation has actually been paid,[66] or, if negotiable, that it has been transferred by the creditor to, and is still outstanding in the hands of, a holder in due course.[67] This rule has been applied where the creditor has received a draft,[68] acceptance,[69] order for payment of money,[70] certificate of deposit,[71] assignment of a chose in action,[72] check,[73] or note,[74] and where it was claimed that payment was effected by furnishing board and lodging.[75] Where, however, the acceptance by the creditor of a note or bill of a third person at the time when a debt is created raises a presumption that it was accepted in payment,[76] the burden is on the creditor to show that it was not so accepted.[77] If the creditor claims that he returned what he received, the burden is on him to prove such fact.[78] Where a draft on a third person is accepted in full satisfaction of the debt when paid, the burden is on the creditor to show due diligence in presenting the draft for payment and giving notice of its dishonor.[79]

[§ 184] 9. Authority To Receive Payment. Where payment is made to a person other than the creditor, the debtor has the burden of showing that the person to whom payment was made was authorized to receive payment,[80] or that the creditor has so acted as to be estopped to deny the existence of such authority.[81]

[§ 185] 10. Effect of Presumptions as to Payment.[82] Where circumstances such as to raise a presumption of payment[83] are shown to exist, the legal effect of the presumption is the same as though direct evidence of payment had been introduced,[84] and while the burden of proof as to the fact of payment is not thereby shifted,[85] the burden then rests on the party claiming nonpayment to introduce evidence to show that his demand has not in fact been paid.[86] The rule in this respect is the same whether the presumption arises from lapse of time,[87] from the alleged debtor's possession of the obligation evidencing the indebtedness,[88] from the acceptance of the negotiable note of the debtor for the amount of an antecedent debt,[89] from the acceptance at the time of the creation of a debt of a draft[90] or other obligation[91] of a third person for the amount of the debt, from the character of the services for which payment is claimed,[92] or from other circumstances.

Eng.—Lowther v. Heaver, 41 Ch. D. 248.

[a] Illustration.—Where a creditor claims that payments on an open account have been applied other than to the oldest item, the burden of proving such fact is upon him. Rickerson Roller-Mill Co. v. Farrell Fdy., etc., Co., 75 Fed. 554, 23 CCA 302.

is or is not the proper application of a payment, the debtor has the burden of proof where he claims that he directed a particular application;[94] and it has also been held incumbent upon him to show that a particular payment was intended to be applied on a particular indebtedness[95] or that there was no other indebtedness to which such payment could properly be applied.[96] It has also been held, however, that the creditor has the burden of proving that his application of a payment to a particular debt was proper.[97] Where payments are applied by the parties, and a surety of the debtor claims that such application is inequitable as to him, he has the burden of proof as to such contention.[98]

[§ 187] 12. Knowledge and Control as Affecting Duty To Produce Evidence. In accordance with the general rule that, where the evidence to prove a fact is chiefly, or entirely, within the control of one party, it is incumbent upon him to produce it, even though he has not the general burden of proof on the issue,[99] it is held that, where payment is asserted as a defense, but the proof of payment is in the exclusive knowledge and control of plaintiff, the burden is on him to produce the evidence.[1]

[§ 188] D. Presumptions[2]—1. Fact of Payment[3]—a. In General. Ordinarily there is no presumption of payment of a debt[4] or other obligation,[5] but in the absence of any evidence on the subject

[b] Payment to common agent of two creditors.—Where defendant, being indebted to plaintiff and another, paid to an agent of plaintiff and such other a sum sufficient to discharge the obligation to plaintiff, and, in an action on the debt to plaintiff, defendant pleads payment and shows the above facts, and no direction of defendant as to the application of the payment at the time of making the same is shown, but plaintiff claims that the payment was applied by the agent to the debt of the other person, the burden rests upon plaintiff to show the existence and validity of such obligation, that it was due when the payment was made, and that it was of such amount as to exhaust the payment made by defendant. Henderson v. Maysville Guano Co., 15 Ga. A. 69, 82 SE 588.

[c] Burden on person not party to payment.—A bank which paid the proceeds of a check fraudulently procured from plaintiff and delivered to it for collection, after receiving notice of plaintiff's rights, was not entitled to reduce the recovery by a sum paid plaintiff by one of the parties to the fraud, without showing that it was paid on that particular debt, there being other debts upon which it might have been applied. Mo.—Trumbo v. Flournoy, 77 Mo. A. 324.

[a] Payment by checks.—In a suit on notes and an account secured by mortgages, where defendants pleaded payment by checks, the burden was on them to maintain the plea, and unless the checks showed for what purpose they were given, or there was some positive evidence as to the transaction to which they were referable, the burden continued on defendants to show they were given in payment of a particular account. Hill v. Green, 127 Ark. 406, 192 SW 209.

[b] Circumstances not increasing burden of proof.—Where a debtor claims that a payment made by him to his creditor holding his unsecured note and also a secured note should have been applied to the secured note, the fact that the creditor, after applying the payment to the unsecured note, transferred the secured note back to the person from whom it was received did not impose upon the debtor any greater burden of proof with respect to the application of the payment than would have rested upon him if the creditor had still been the holder of both notes. "Where a lien claimant has received payment during the existence of the obligation for which his claim of lien is thereafter filed, without applying it to any particular obligation, in a suit to foreclose his lien, in which he claims that such payment was properly applicable to some other obligation, it is logical to place upon him the burden of proving facts warranting such application, especially so where, as here, the evidence of such facts, plaintiff's book account . . . is in the possession and under the control of the plaintiff and not accessible to the defendant." Madera Sugar Pine Co. v. Adams, supra.

[a] Illustration.—Where the seller of merchandise to one concern applied checks of such concern, signed by its manager, on debts of another concern having the same manager, the seller had the burden of proving that the payments were properly applied. Ellerbeck v. Shank Auto Co., 43 Ida. 780, 783, 254 P 1055 [cit Cyc].

[b] Application of proceeds of mortgaged property.—The creditor has the burden of proving: (1) That there was an agreement by which the proceeds of mortgaged property were to be applied on a debt other than the mortgage debt. Greer v. Turner, 47 Ark. 17, 14 SW 383. (2) That the application of the proceeds of mortgaged chattels to the payment of an unsecured debt was consented to or ratified by the mortgagor. Boyd v. Jones, 96 Ala. 305, 11 S 405, 38 AmSR 100.

[c] Oral agreement differing from written agreement.—Where a written obligation provides that payments shall be applied toward discharge of a particular indebtedness, the obligees have the burden of proving an oral agreement that they should be applied in another way. "In the ordinary suit at law there is no presumption of payment." Ehrich v. Andrews, 207 App. Div. 378, 381, 202 NYS 65.

[a] Services.—In a proceeding to recover for services rendered, if plaintiff was entitled to pay for the services, the presumption was that compensation therefor was due and unpaid. Marx v. Marx, 132 Wis. 113, 111 NW 1103.

[b] Mortgage note.—There is no presumption that a mortgage note was paid at maturity. Bennett v. Delphia, 98 Vt. 492, 129 A 234; Sowles v. Minot, 82 Vt. 344, 73 A 1025, 137 Am SR 1010.

[c] Disappearance or loss of a bond and mortgage does not give rise to a presumption of payment. Lowe v. Leary, 184 App. Div. 421, 171 NYS 637 [aff 227 N. Y. 629 mem, 125 NE 920 mem].

[d] Receipted account.—Where land was sold to be paid for on installments, a receipted account between the parties, to an amount larger than a particular installment, will not raise a presumption that such account was paid by applying the amount thereof to the payment of the installment, but "the presumption from the account being receipted generally would seem to be quite the contrary." Clark v. Wells, 5 Gray (Mass.) 69, 71.

5. Canaday v. Krum, 83 N. Y. 67, 11 NYWklyDig 316 [aff 8 NYWkly Dig 193]; Miller's Est., 33 Pa. Super. 20.

[a] Where a husband receives money owing to his wife, and receipts for it as her agent, and it appears that the wife was not present when the payment was made, there is no presumption, after the husband's death, that he had, in his lifetime, paid over the money to his wife. Miller's Est., 33 Pa. Super. 20.

[b] Moral obligation.—No presumption of payment arises from the fact that there was a moral obligation on the part of a person to make reparation for his wrong by payment of the resulting loss. Canaday v. Krum, 83 N. Y. 67, 73, 11 NYWklyDig

there is a rebuttable[6] presumption against payment.[7] On the other hand, however, it has been said that the law presumes that every person is solvent and pays his just debts and obligations;[8] and the peculiar circumstances of a particular case may raise a presumption of payment.[9]

[§ 189] b. Possession of Obligation—(1) By Obligee.[10] Where a written obligation providing for the payment of money is in the possession of the obligee and uncanceled,[11] this fact raises a rebuttable[12] presumption that the debt evidenced thereby has not been paid,[13] except in so far as the obligation bears indorsements by the obligee showing payments to have been made thereon.[14] This rule has been applied to bills and notes,[15] bonds,[16] mortgages,[17] and receipts for money deposited.[18]

Conversely, the obligee's failure to produce the obligation which he seeks to enforce, coupled with lapse of time and other circumstances, may afford conclusive evidence of payment.[19]

[§ 190] (2) By Obligor.[20] Where a written obligation providing for the payment of money is in the possession of the obligor, or is found among his papers and effects after his death,[21] this fact raises a rebuttable[22] presumption that the indebtedness evidenced thereby has been paid,[23] and this rule is 316 [aff 8 NYWklyDig 193].

[c] Money paid out for another.—Plaintiff's intestate had been engaged in purchasing bonds and mortgages and defendant had acted as agent for him and had procured and sold to him several bonds and mortgages, which were in intestate's possession at the time of his death. Defendant had received from the intestate a sum of money, less than he had expended for the bonds and mortgages, and had given plaintiff a receipt for this amount. It was held that the fact of the intestate's possession of the bonds and mortgages at the time of his death did not create a presumption that he had paid for them otherwise than by the money represented by the receipt. [a] Board furnished as payment on note.—A husband gave his wife a promissory note, and thereafter a sick and feeble niece of the wife was taken into the family under an agreement that the wife would pay half of her board. It was held that, after the death of both husband and wife, it was to be inferred that the board of the niece was by mutual consent applied upon the note and should have been treated as a payment thereon. Murphy v. Carpenter, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 15.

Possession consistent with nonpayment. The presumption of payment which ordinarily arises from the obligor's possession of the instrument evidencing his obligation is not important where the facts and circumstances surrounding such possession are shown by the evidence.[30] No presumption of payment arises where the obligor's possession is entirely consistent with nonpayment,[31] as in a case where the obligor has access to the papers of the obligee and might thus have acquired possession of the obligation without payment.[32] A fortiori, the finding of the obligation in a place to which both obligor and obligee had access and in which papers belonging to both of them were kept does not raise a presumption of payment.[33] Where one issues orders on [a] Reasons for rule.—(1) "Ordinarily the owner of a note retains it until it is paid." Grimes v. Hilliary, 151 Ill. 141, 149, 36 NE 977 [quot Clymer v. Groff, 220 Pa. 580, 584, 69 A 1119, 14 AnnCas 256]. (2) "The law assumes that an evidence of debt given by one person to another will be found, not in the possession of the debtor, but in the hands of the creditor. Therefore, when the reverse is the case, that is, when the evidence of debt is found in the possession of the debtor, a strong presumption arises that the debt has been canceled either by payment or gift." Hall v. O'Brien, 160 App. Div. 851, 853, 146 NYS 551 [aff 218 N. Y. 50, 112 NE 569].

[b] Where a vendee gives a note for the price, which is a lien on the land sold, the possession of such note by one purchasing the land from the vendee is prima facie evidence of payment by one of them. Potts v. Coleman, 86 Ala. 94, 5 S 780.

24. See statutory provisions.

[a] Statute applicable.—Under statutes providing that it will be presumed that an obligation delivered to the debtor has been paid and that things in the possession of a person are owned by him, a mortgagor's possession of the note secured by the mortgage, together with the abstract of title to the premises, raises a strong presumption that the mortgage debt has been paid. [b] Possession of unindorsed check by bank.—Possession by a bank of an unindorsed check drawn on it in favor of complainant or his order, coupled with evidence that it was not its custom to require a payee to indorse the check when paid to him in person, is not sufficient to show payment to him, when denied by him. Compare Larimore v. Wells, 29 Oh. St. 13 (mere opportunity to obtain possession of the written evidence of indebtedness unlawfully does not as a matter of law destroy the presumption of payment arising from its possession by the obligor, but the effect to be given to such opportunity is for the determination of the jury).

"Where the maker has access to the papers of the holder, and may have acquired the note as well without payment as with, the presumption of payment does not arise. There is no presumption prejudicial to the maker from the possession, simply, for the reason that the presumption of innocence would repel it. There is simply no presumption that the note is, or is not, paid." Grimes v. Hilliary, 150 Ill. 141, 149, 36 NE 977 [quot Clymer v. Groff, supra].

33. Clymer v. Groff, supra; Mynes v. Mynes, 47 W. Va. 681, 35 SE 935.

[a] Safe deposit box used by both husband and wife.—Where a husband executed a mortgage on his real estate to his attorney, who assigned it to the mortgagor's wife, and the mortgage was recorded, but after the death of the mortgagor, the mortgage, together with the bond and assignment, was found in a safe deposit box of the mortgagor, to which both he and his wife had access and a key, there was no presumption that the mortgage was paid. Clymer v. Groff, 220 Pa. 580, 69 A 1119, 14 AnnCas 256.

[b] Trunk in which papers of husband and wife kept.—Where a husband executed and delivered to his wife three bonds or notes and a deed of trust securing them, and a merchant for delivery of goods to a third person, the fact that such orders are in the possession of the person by whom they were issued does not raise a presumption that he has paid for goods delivered pursuant thereto.[34]

[§ 191] c. Acts Inconsistent with Existence of Indebtedness—(1) In General. Even though it is proved or admitted that there was at one time an indebtedness from one person to another, subsequent acts of the persons concerned, inconsistent with the continued existence of such indebtedness, may raise a rebuttable[35] presumption that the debt has been paid.[36] Thus, where one person pays money to another[37] or executes and delivers to such other his written obligation for the payment of money,[38] it will be presumed that any preëxisting indebtedness of the latter to the former has been paid, unless the situation is such that the payment is consistent with the continued existence of the debt.[39]

[§ 192] (2) Cancellation of Obligation. Cancellation by the creditor of the evidence of indebtedness, by destruction, mutilation, or otherwise, raises a presumption of payment.[40] But detaching matured coupons from a bond before pledging it as security raises no presumption that the coupons are paid or canceled.[41]

[§ 193] d. Duty To Pay and To Collect United in Same Person. It has been held that, where the same person has, in one capacity, the obligation to pay a debt and the means to pay it, and, in another capacity, the duty and authority to demand and receive payment of such debt, it will be presumed that the debt has been paid,[42] although it has also been considered that such a presumption can arise only in cases where the individual has no remedy except by retainer.[43]

[§ 194] e. Creditor's Possession of Debtor's Money. The fact that a creditor has money in his hands belonging to his debtor tends to raise a presumption of payment,[44] and the presumption is stronger where there are corroborating circumstances.[45]

[§ 195] f. Remittance by Mail. The usual presumption that mail matter, properly addressed, stamped, and mailed, was received by the addressee[46] has been held to be applicable in the case of money sent by mail.[47] But it has also been held that, in the absence of any showing that the creditor directed money to be sent to him by mail, a presumption of payment does not arise from the mere fact that money, inclosed in a proper wrapper, properly addressed and stamped, was mailed to the creditor.[48]

after his death they were found, together with other papers of his, as well as papers of the wife, in a trunk, the key of which was in the wife's possession, there was no presumption of payment. Mynes v. Mynes, 47 W. Va. 681, 35 SE 935.

[a] Illustration.—Where a mill owner, sued by a storekeeper for goods furnished his employees on orders or "brass plucks" issued by him against plaintiff, was shown to be in possession of such orders or "plucks," such possession by him did not raise a presumption of payment. [§ 196] g. Nonproduction of Documents. In accordance with the usual rules as to the presumptions arising from the nonproduction of evidence,[49] where one claiming to be a creditor whose debt is evidenced by a written instrument fails to produce such instrument or satisfactorily to account for its nonproduction,[50] a presumption arises that the debt has been paid;[51] and, on the other hand, where a debtor claims that he paid the debt and took a receipt therefor, his failure to produce such receipt or account for its nonproduction creates an inference unfavorable to his claim of payment.[52]

[§ 197] h. Accounts. Where a creditor renders an account in which a particular item is not included, it will be presumed that such item has been paid,[53] and where an account of transactions between two persons is kept by one of them, and the other has access to them and inspects them, it may be presumed that an indebtedness not represented in such account has been paid.[54] But the absence of entries in an account book with respect to particular payments will not raise a presumption that they were not made in the face of positive testimony that they were made.[55]

[§ 198] i. Lapse of Time—(1) In General. It is a universally recognized rule[56] that mere lapse of time may raise a presumption of payment of a debt.[57] Such a presumption exists at common 150 P 1126, LRA1918A 531 ("the delivery in the mails of a package containing the money, addressed to the consignee, in the absence of some showing of an agreement or custom to that effect, does not raise a presumption that the carrier was the consignee's agent. At the time of the death of the vendor brother, the account showed a balance in his favor of sixteen hundred and eighty-three dollars and fourteen cents. It was held that it would be presumed that annual balances of the account in favor of the vendee brother were applied in payment of the purchase price of the land and interest thereon, but that no such presumption could be indulged in as to items added to the account after the death of the vendor brother. [a] Basis of rule.—"The presumption of payment is based upon the experience of mankind that vouchers, acquittances and evidences of payment are not usually preserved from one generation to another; that creditors usually desire their own without waiting a score of years upon their debtors; and that, where there has been no recognition of the claim by the debtor, and the creditor has forborne to assert a right for so long a time, it is most probable that his claim has been in some way satisfied." Courtney v. Staudenmayer, 56 Kan. 392, 43 P 758, 54 AmSR 592.

[b] Origin of rule.—The rule "is of equitable origin, founded on experience of the ordinary course of business and human affairs, and adopted by the law in the interests of repose and the ending of litigation." In re Ash, 202 Pa. 422, 424, 51 A 1030, 90 AmSR 658.

[c] A rule of public policy.—The presumption is a "well-settled and excellent rule of public policy that punishes a plaintiff for excessive delay in asserting his right." Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co. v. U. S., 240 Fed. 903, 908, 153 CCA 589 [aff 250 U. S. 123, 39 SCt 407, 63 L. ed. 889]. To like effect Van Loon v. Smith, 103 Pa. 238.

[d] Defendant's failure to testify as to payment does not affect the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of twenty years. Gilmore v. Alexander, 268 Pa. 415, 112 A 9.

[e] The creditor's ignorance of the whereabouts of the debtor, or of any property of the debtor which may be subjected to his claim, does not affect the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of twenty years. Roach v. Cox, 160 Ala. 425, 49 S 578, 135 AmSR 107.

[f] Failure to reduce wife's choses in action.—No presumption of payment arises from the mere neglect of a husband to reduce his wife's choses in action to his possession for the lapse of time ordinarily sufficient to create a presumption of payment. Cartmell v. Perkins, 2 Del. Ch. 102.

[g] Effect of testamentary provision.—"A man who holds overdue obligations certainly may not prevent . . . a presumption of payment from being established by lapse of time after his death by providing in his will that his executor shall not institute any proceedings to enforce such obligations or take any steps to collect the same during the lifetime of an individual named, or during any other period, measured in any law,[58] but there are also to be found statutes creating such presumptions and fixing definite periods after the lapse of which they shall arise.[59] The presumption is not abrogated by statutes limiting the time within which actions must be brought,[60] but may arise, although the particular debt is not barred by limitations,[61] where the statutory period had been extended by reason of the circumstances of the particular case.[62] Conversely, the fact that a debt is barred by limitations raises no presumption that it has actually been paid.[63] It would seem, however, that, where action on a claim is barred by statute, no necessity exists for relying upon the presumption of payment from lapse of time.[64]

Presumption prevails in equity. The presumption of payment from the lapse of time obtains in courts of equity as well as in courts of law.[65]

Statute precluding presumption. Where a statute expressly provides that lapse of time shall not be set up as a defense to any claim made under it, the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time cannot be indulged.[66]

[§ 199] (2) Nature of Presumption. The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time is one of fact,[67] and differs essentially from the bar of the statute of limitations.[68] This presumption is usually drawn from the evidence in support of the claim,[69] and amounts to nothing more than a rule of evidence[70] affecting the burden of going forward with the evidence on the issue of payment or nonpayment.[71]

Statutes creating presumptions of payment after the lapse of a specified time[72] are sometimes regarded as being in effect statutes of limitation, so that the lapse of the prescribed period renders the claim nonexistent as a cause of action enforceable in the courts regardless of whether or not actual payment has been made.[73]

[§ 200] (3) Effect of Presumption. The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time is equivalent to direct proof of payment,[74] but it cannot operate to divest or invest title to real-way." Swinley v. Force, 78 N. J. Eq. 52, 61, 78 A 249.

[b] A decree of probate court, on the petition of a distributee, partially settling the accounts of an administrator, distributing assets, and directing the payment of a debt, the only object of the proceeding being such distribution, neither the administrator nor any creditor being served with process, or in any way made parties, will not prevent the presumption of payment of the debt arising from lapse of time. Wilson v. Wilson, 29 S. C. 260, 7 SE 490.

Patchin, 20 OhNPNS 338, 342 ("The note and the interest are all under one contract, and the interest is an increment of the note and it is a part of the note and to hold that the payments of interest were barred by the common law presumption would be dividing this note into two separate contracts, one for the principal, and the other for the interest due upon the principal, and in effect it would be holding that the note was in full force and effect as to principal and barred by the common law presumption of payment with respect to interest thereon, and the holding of the court is against the defendants on that proposition").

"This is a different subject from the limitation of actions. Statutes of limitation presuppose an established substantive right, but forbid the plaintiff from enforcing it by the customary remedies. The statute is a weapon of defense, and ordinarily must be pleaded and relied on by the defendant, while the presumption or inference of payment arising from the lapse of time—generally from the lapse of 20 years—is usually drawn from the plaintiff's own case, and when so drawn it can hardly be regarded as a matter of affirmative defense. If the plaintiff cannot make out a prima facie case without showing also the fact of nonpayment for more than 20 years, the presumption of payment immediately arises, attaches at once to his evidence, and weakens it to such an extent that he cannot recover unless he goes further and undertakes to prove facts tending to repel the presumption. The defendant is not required to repeat the proof that 20 years have elapsed without payment, for that has already appeared; he need only call the court's attention thereto, and may then rest upon the presumption or inference of fact arising therefrom until the plaintiff has strengthened the weak point in his own attack. If, however, the plaintiff makes no effort so to do, he fails altogether, but he fails solely for the reason that he has not made out his case—in other words, because his evidence lacks persuasive power." ty.[75] The presumption prima facie obliterates the debt,[76] and is conclusive in the absence of any evidence tending to show payment.[77] It does not, however, create an absolute bar[78] or conclusively extinguish the debt,[79] and, indeed, the presumption does not arise, or is completely destroyed, where the fact of nonpayment is admitted or proved.[80] The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time may outweigh any presumption of nonpayment arising from the obligee's possession of an instrument providing for the payment of money.[81]

[§ 201] (4) Who May Take Advantage of Presumption. Only the alleged debtor can take advantage of the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time,[82] and it cannot be invoked by third persons whose rights or liabilities might be affected by the fact of payment or nonpayment by the debtor.[83] Where, however, the presumption arises in favor of one of several obligors, it inures to the benefit of all.[84] The presumption applies in favor of fiduciaries as well as those who are debtors in the individual capacity,[85] and is as strong in favor of the personal representative of a deceased debtor as it would be in favor of the debtor himself, if alive.[86] But it has been held that a trustee of an express trust cannot rely on the lapse of time as raising a presumption of payment by him in execution of the trust.[87]

[§ 202] (5) Against Whom Presumption Available. The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time is not limited to claims in favor of private individuals or corporations,[88] but applies also to claims in favor of, or debts due to, the United States government,[89] or to the various states of the

[§ 204] (7) Period Necessary To Create Presumption—(a) Under Statute. Where the period which shall give rise to a presumption of payment is prescribed by statute,[95] such provisions, of course, govern with respect to the length of the period.[96]

[§ 205] (b) Apart from Statute—aa. Lapse of Time Alone. The mere lapse of a period of twenty years after maturity of a debt, without recognition thereof by the debtor or assertion thereof by the creditor, is sufficient, without any other circumstances, to raise a presumption of payment,[97] and before such a tribunal, and demand allowance forthwith. Speaking generally, it must offer the same evidence as an individual, both in quantity and quality; and if it offers none, or if the evidence be insufficient, it fails precisely as the individual fails in similar circumstances. The property of a citizen can only be taken according to the rules and forms of law, and, even if it be the sovereign who is striving to take it by an action in court, we think the sovereign also should be required to prove his right, and to prove it with the same strictness and according to the same rules as prevail in other cases." Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co. v. U. S., supra.

[a] Statutory presumption.—(1) A statute providing that, after the lapse of four years from the maturity of the indebtedness, the purchase money of land shall be conclusively presumed to have been paid, in a suit to recover such land or enforce a lien thereon for purchase money applies in a suit by a county to recover land sold by it. McKinney v. Freestone County, (Tex. Commn. A.) 291 SW 529, 531 [rev (Civ. A.) 285 SW 340] ("It is thoroughly settled that when the state or any arm of sovereignty comes into the court, it is subject to all the rules of evidence usually applicable to ordinary parties, including this very presumption under discussion"). (2) A contrary view has been asserted on the ground that the constitution denies to the legislature the power "to release or extinguish, or to authorize the releasing or extinguishing, in whole or in part, the indebtedness, liability or obligation of any incorporation or individual, to this state, or to any county or other municipal corporation therein," and that provision is broad enough to cover a statute which would in effect release or extinguish such an obligation whether this is effected by creating a period of limitations or a rule of evidence. West v. Cameron County, (Tex. Civ. A.) 4 SW (2d) 111, 116 [refusing to follow McKinney v. Freestone County, supra, on the ground that "the Supreme Court did not approve the ruling of the Commission of Appeals, but merely approved the result"].

[a] Attack on street assessment.—Under a statute which prohibits the vacation of an assessment for irregularity except in the case of an assessment for repaving a street, for the paving of which an assessment has once been paid, one who seeks to vacate a repaving assessment cannot rely upon a presumption of payment of a previous paving assessment arising from lapse of time but must prove actual payment. In re Willett, 70 N. Y. 490; Matter of Serrill, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 233.

[b] In a suit to compel release of a mortgage as a cloud on title, the presumption of payment arising from the mortgagor's possession for twenty years after maturity of the mortgage, without any claim being made by the holders of the mortgage, is not sufficient to warrant relief in the absence of any affirmative evidence of payment. Cacy v. Slay, 127 Md. 493, 96 A 690, 1 ALR 764.

[c] Suit to establish title under Burnt Records Act.—The presumption of payment of a debt, such as the price of land, after the lapse of twenty years after it becomes due without demand, is available to a vendee in a suit against him by the vendor's heir to establish and register title under the Burnt Records Act, where the vendee and his heirs have been in undisturbed possession for more than twenty years since the debt became due. Fagan v. Bach, 253 Ill. 588, 594, 97 NE 1087, AnnCas1913A 505 ("In this case no cross-petition was filed and the defendants asked no affirmative relief. The appellants, at most, sought to repel the attack made upon their title by the appellee, and if it were conceded that the presumption of payment may only be used as a shield and for the purpose of defense and that it cannot be used as a sword and for the purpose of attack, we are unable to see how it can be said that presumption is sought to be used for the purpose of attack in this case").

[a] Reason for presumption.—The presumption has been said to stand upon clear principle, built upon reason, the nature and character of man, and the result of human experience. It resolves itself into this, that every person, individual and corporate, will naturally possess and enjoy what belongs to him. Grantham v. Canaan, 38 N. H. 268.

[b] "The presumption of payment is based upon the experience of mankind that vouchers, acquittances and evidences of payment are not usually preserved from one generation to another; that creditors usually desire their own without waiting a score of years upon their debtors; and that, where there has been no recognition of the claim by the debtor, and the creditor has forborne to assert a right for so long a time, it is most probable that his claim has been in some way satisfied." Courtney v. Staudenmayer, 56 Kan. 392, 398, 43 P 758, 54 AmSR 592 [quot Milwee v. Phelps, 53 Tex. Civ. A. 195, 200, 115 it is equally well established that the lapse of any shorter period is not, standing alone, sufficient to raise such presumption,[98] except in Tennessee, where it is held that a lapse of sixteen years is sufficient to raise the presumption,[99] although there is some authority in favor of the adoption of a shorter period in analogy to shorter periods fixed by statutes of limitations in the jurisdiction.[1]

The death of the debtor does not interrupt the running of the period necessary to raise a presumption of payment.[2]

Debtor as administrator of creditor's estate. Where twenty years have not elapsed from the maturity of a debt to the death of the creditor, and the debtor becomes administrator of the creditor's estate, the time subsequent to the issuing of letters of administration cannot be added to the prior period in order to extend the time to the twenty years necessary to raise a presumption of payment.[3]

[§ 206] bb. Lapse of Time in Connection with Other Circumstances—(aa) In General. While, in the absence of any statute fixing a shorter period at the end of which a presumption of payment shall arise,[4] the mere lapse of any period short of twenty years will not, of itself, raise any presumption of payment,[5] the lapse of a period of less than twenty years may, in connection with other circumstances indicating payment, raise a presumption of payment,[6] even though such other circumstances, in and of themselves, would not be sufficient to raise any such presumption.[7]

[c] A rule of convenience and policy.—"The rule that after the lapse of 20 years debts of every kind are presumed to be paid is a rule of convenience and policy, resulting from a necessary regard for the peace and security of society, and also for the debtor, who shou'd not be called upon to defend stale claims at a time when witnesses are dead, and papers lost or destroyed." Purvis v. Johnson, 163 Ga. 698, 137 SE 50 (holding that such a presumption arose after the lapse of nine years, under statutes providing that actions upon open accounts or for breach of contract not under the hands of the party sought to be charged or upon any implied assumpsit or undertaking should be brought within four years and that the time between the death of a person and representation taken upon his estate, not exceeding five years, should not be counted as against creditors).

[§ 207] (bb) Circumstances Aiding To Raise Presumption. It is not possible to define with any exactness what circumstances, in connection with lapse of time, will be sufficient to create the presumption of payment,[8] for the force of the mere lapse of time varies according to the time which has elapsed, strengthening as this period approaches twenty years,[9] and, naturally, the increasing force of the circumstance of lapse of time correspondingly decreases the requirements as to the additional circumstances which are necessary to establish the presumption.[10] The effect of lapse of time may be aided by such matters as a recital of payment in a deed,[11] declarations of the creditor that the debt has been paid,[12] failure of the creditor to include an obligation among his taxable assets,[13] failure of the drawee of a draft to return it,[14] or the creditor's failure to return, or offer to return, an obligation of a third person given to him by the debtor for collection.[15] The debtor's ability to pay will not, of itself, aid in creating a presumption of payment,[16] but such ability, coexisting with a need of money on the part of the creditor, may give rise to

[a] Custom not to give receipts.—The fact that it is not usual for domestics to give receipts for sums paid to them, in connection with the lapse of three years, does not raise a presumption of payment, under an agreement for a certain sum per week, to be paid weekly. Snediker v. Everingham, 27 N. J. L. 143.

Brubaker v. Taylor, 76 Pa. 83. (2) When the creditor made no attempt to collect for fourteen years and repeatedly declared that the debt was paid, a presumption of payment arose. Burks v. Strader, 13 Ky. Op. 101.

[a] Where no plea of payment is interposed, no presumption of payment for services arose from the fact that the persons to whom they were rendered were very wealthy and there was no reason why they should not have paid for the services from time to time. Ryans v. Hospes, 167 Mo. 342, 67 SW 285.

a presumption of payment after a considerable lapse of time,[17] and the necessitous circumstances of the creditor together with unexplained delay in attempting to enforce the obligation may raise a presumption of payment, although there is no showing as to the financial condition of the debtor.[18]

[§ 208] (c) Period Short of Statutory Limitation of Action. The common-law presumption of payment cannot arise from the lapse of any period shorter than that prescribed by the statute of limitations for bringing action upon the particular character of the debt or claim involved.[19]

[§ 209] (8) Time from Which Period Runs.[20] Ordinarily, the period necessary to raise a presumption of payment from lapse of time does not begin to run until a cause of action has accrued by reason of maturity of the debt,[21] but, under special circumstances, the period may commence to run prior to the accrual of the cause of action.[22] Where the instrument evidencing an obligation fixes a date for payment, the period will run from such date although, by the terms of the instrument, the entire amount might have become due prior to such date.[23] Where an instrument provides for payment "within" a certain time, payment will be presumed after the lapse of twenty years from the expiration of such time.[24]

Where a debt is payable on demand, the period may run, although no demand has been made.[25]

[§ 210] (9) Debts or Obligations to Which Presumption Applicable—(a) In General. The presumption of payment from lapse of time applies to all indebtedness, however evidenced,[26] and whether secured or unsecured.[27] Among debts or obligations to which the presumption has been applied are bonds,[28]

"The fact that the plaintiff during the period when he might have enforced his claim by suit, if he had one, was in indigent circumstances and needed the use of the money, is a circumstance tending to justify the presumption that the demand has been paid or otherwise satisfied." Huff v. Simmers, supra.

[a] Installment mortgage.—(1) Where a mortgage consists of a single instrument, covering a single indebtedness, and payable by installments, the twenty years necessary to raise a presumption of payment will begin to run from the date fixed by the contract for payment of the last installment, and not from a date thirty days after a default in the payment of an installment or interest, although the mortgage contains a clause providing that on such default for a period of thirty days the whole of the principal and interest shall become due and payable. Smith v. Timmons, 50 Pa. Super. 486. (2) With respect to a mortgage, the time necessary to create a presumption of payment runs from the date of the last payment and does not arise until the full period has elapsed from the date of such payment, even though the mortgagor remains in possession. [a] In an action to try title to land, the presumption that a debt secured by a mortgage was paid, and the mortgage thereby satisfied will arise from its existence for a long time before suit. Hume v. Le Compte, (Tex. Civ. A.) 142 SW 934.

[b] Absolute deed intended as mortgage.—The rule as to presumption of payment from lapse of time applies where the security, although in the form of an absolute deed, is shown to have been intended as a mortgage. Swart v. Service, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 36, 34 AmD 211.

[a] On a scire facias sur mortgage, where it appears that the suit was brought more than twenty years after the mortgage became due, and there is nothing on the face of the pleadings to rebut the presumption of payment from the lapse of twenty years, no judgment can be entered against defendant or the terre tenants either for want of an affidavit of defense, or for want of appearance, or for want of a plea. If such a judgment is entered it may be stricken off at the instance of a terre tenant against whom the judgment was entered. Duggan v. Strange, 40 Pa. Co. 425.

[b] A lapse of twenty years after a decree of foreclosure without any attempt to enforce it by a sale raises a presumption of payment. Barnard v. Onderdonk, 98 N. Y. 158. Presumption of payment of judgment generally see Judgments §§ 1069, 1070.

[a] Payment may be presumed where there has been a lapse of: (1) Fifteen years without any effort to enforce the mortgage, and there is evidence that the mortgagor was at all times solvent and able to pay the debt. McMurray v. McMurray, 63 Hun 183, 17 NYS 657. (2) Thirteen years, with corroborating circumstances. Butler v. Washington, 28 S. C. 607, 5 SE 601.

[b] Circumstances insufficient to raise presumption.—A delay of sixteen years in bringing an action to reform and foreclose a mortgage will not raise a presumption of payment where the mortgagee was a member of the mortgagor's household and the mortgagor never demanded his mortgage. Davison v. Dennis, 176 Ala. 435, 58 S 401.

58. Wilkinson v. Flowers, 37 Miss. 579, 75 AmD 78.

No presumption of payment of barred debt generally see supra § 198.

[§ 212] (c) Obligation To Make Periodical Payments. Mere lapse of time during which no attention is paid to an obligation to make periodical payments will not alone raise a presumption that the obligation to make such payments has been discharged,[59] although such a presumption may arise from lapse of time in connection with other circumstances,[60] and mere lapse of time may raise a presumption that particular payments pursuant to such obligation have been made.[61] Where there has been an agreement for the discharge of such an obligation by the payment of a fixed sum, lapse of time after the making of such agreement may raise a presumption that the sum agreed on was paid and the obligation discharged.[62]

[§ 213] (d) Indebtedness between Husband and Wife.[63] The presumption of payment from lapse of time does not ordinarily arise in the case of an indebtedness between husband and wife;[64] but there are cases in which such presumption has been indulged with respect to an obligation running to a trustee for the wife, and securing an indebtedness from the husband to the wife.[65]

[§ 214] 2. Full or Partial Payment—a. In General. A payment made by a debtor to a creditor will be presumed to be in full unless the contrary appears,[66] and accordingly, the payment of a particular debt may raise a presumption that an earlier debt has been paid.[67] As a general rule it is held that, where a debtor gives a promissory note to his creditor, it will be presumed that all matured debts of inferior degree between the parties were settled at the date of the note and that it was given for the balance due,[68] although there is authority for the view that no such presumption arises,[69] unless the note is given for the particular account in question or on a general settlement of accounts between the parties.[70]

A claim that part payment has been made raises a presumption that payment in full has not been made.[71]

[§ 215] b. Regular Payments as Full Settlement. Where the relations of the parties are such as call for periodical payments by one to the other, and periodical payments are made, there is a rebuttable[72] presumption that each payment was in full settlement of all claims arising out of such relation up to the date of such payment.[73]

[a] Failure to enforce judgment for alimony.—Where after a judgment awarding alimony at a certain rate per year, there has been no recognition by either party of any obligation for about forty years, and during that time the wife to whom alimony was awarded has made no attempt to enforce payment, although under the statute she had a remedy by merely applying to the court for leave to issue execution, it will be presumed that the obligation to pay alimony has been discharged. Van Ness v. Ransom, 83 Misc. 178, 144 NYS 420 [aff 164 App. Div. 483, 150 NYS 251 (aff sub nom. Parsons v. Macfarlane, 220 N. Y. 605 mem, 115 NE 1046 mem)].

[a] Reason for rule.—"One ground for a presumption of payment growing out of lapse of time is that a man is always ready to enjoy what is his own. . . . The ground stated . . . cannot in justice be applied to a wife, for however ready she may be to enjoy what is her own, or to reclaim it from her husband, she is ever subject to his counsel and advice, and his refusal to pay must be submitted to by her, if domestic peace and happiness are to be preserved. . . . To require the wife to enforce her right by legal proceedings against her husband in order to prevent the conclusive presumption of payment contended for here, will introduce a doctrine tending to provoke litigation between husband and wife, while the settled policy of the law is in favor of its prevention." Ayres v. Ayres, 69 N. J. Eq. 343, 345, 60 A 422 [aff 69 N. J. Eq. 842, 66 A 1133].

[b] "The best considered decisions upon the subject in hand, even since the Married Woman's Property Acts, are to the effect that, owing to the social importance of maintaining the family relation, in suits between a wife and her husband for the protection of the former's property, statutes of limitation, as also presumptions or estoppels by lapse of time do not ordinarily affect the rights of the wife, since she cannot be expected to treat her husband as a stranger; as certain courts have well said, any other policy would be apt to beget disagreements and contentions in the family fatal to domestic peace." Morrish v. Morrish, 262 Pa. 192, 201, 105 A. 83.

[c] Where a husband holds a mortgage from his wife, payment cannot be presumed from his failure to foreclose the mortgage for many years while he and his wife were living together. "Nor is it to be presumed from his failure to sue his wife after their separation, which occurred six or seven years before the action was brought; for nonaction might well be attributed to delicacy of feeling." [b] Trust deed.—Where a husband executed a trust deed to secure a debt owing to his wife, but remained in possession with his wife for more than thirty years after the maturity of the debt, and until his death, and there was no evidence to show possession of the land by the wife, or by the husband for the wife, there is a presumption that the mortgage debt and deed were extinguished after the lapse of more than twenty years after maturity. Bills, Notes, Etc.—(1) Of Debtor. In some states the rule is that, where a debtor gives to his creditor his negotiable[75] bill of exchange,[76] order for the payment of money,[77] or promissory note,[78] there is a rebuttable[79] presumption that such bill or note is accepted as payment.[80] The more generally accepted rule, however, is that no such presumption arises,[81] but, on the contrary, there is a rebuttable[82] presumption that a bill of exchange,[83] order for the payment of money,[84] or promissory note,[85] given by a debtor to his creditor for an original indebtedness." [a] "It is a well settled rule of law in this State and Massachusetts that a negotiable promissory note, given for a simple contract debt, is prima facie to be deemed a payment or satisfaction of such debt as between the parties thereto, which simply means, that without further evidence of intent than the giving and receiving of such note, it is construed to be payment. Equally well settled is the rule that this presumption of payment, which is a presumption of fact, may be rebutted by evidence showing a contrary intention. These two rules are usually stated together." Spitz v. Morse, 104 Me. 447, 450, 72 A 178.

[b] Basis of rule.—"It is founded on the consideration, that when a note is given for goods, even if it is not negotiated, it is equally convenient to the creditor (and generally more so) to sue on the note, as on the original consideration. and so there is no reason for considering the original simple contract as still subsisting and in force; and therefore a presumption arises, that it was intended by the parties that the note should be deemed a satisfaction." Curtis v. Hubbard, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 322, 328 [quot Brewer Lumber Co. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 179 Mass. 228, 234, 60 NE 548, 88 AmSR 375, 54 LRA 435].

[c] The reason of the rule is the protection of the debtor who might otherwise be compelled to pay both the note and the debt. Brewer Lumber Co. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 179 Mass. 228, 60 NE 548, 88 AmSR 375, 54 LRA 435; Davis v. Parsons, 157 Mass. 584, 32 NE 1117.

[d] "The rule is variously expressed in the cases. It is sometimes said that the circumstances raise a presumption of payment and sometimes that they afford presumptive evidence of payment. What is always meant is that a party makes out a prima facie case of payment when he shows a negotiable note given and received for an antecedent debt without more." Rutland R., etc., Co. v. Williams, 90 Vt. 276, 279, 98 A 85.

[e] "In simple contract debts, . . . a promissory note given by a debtor to his creditor is presumed to be a payment." Brewer Lumber Co. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 179 Mass. 228, 234, 60 NE 548, 88 AmSR 375, 54 LRA 435.

[f] The giving of a new note in place of an old one is prima facie a payment of the old note but it is not a payment where it is shown that it was not taken and received as payment and was not intended by the parties as payment. Fox v. Terre Haute Nat. Bank, 78 Ind. A. 666, 129 NE 33.

[g] Third person as payee.—A negotiable note executed by the debtor to a third person at the request of the creditor is prima facie payment of a preëxisting debt. Beach v. Huntsman, 42 Ind. A. 205, 85 NE 523. To same effect Smalley v. Edey, 19 Ill. 207.

[h] Note given on accrual of debt.—"A promissory note given for a debt which accrued at the time the note was given is presumptive evidence of the payment of the debt, so that no action can be maintained upon the

[b] Where the note is not the obligation of all the parties liable for the debt, the presumption that it was given and accepted in payment does not arise. Baldwin v. Porter, 217 Mass. 15, 104 NE 492; Melledge v. Boston Iron Co., 5 Cush. (Mass.) 158, 51 AmD 59; Hoeflinger v. Wells, 47 Wis. 628, 3 NW 589.

[c] Effect of agreement.—Where it is expressly agreed that notes shall not be regarded as payment, there is no presumption that new notes given "in replacement" of the old notes are accepted as payment of the debt. Giligian v. New England Truck Co., (Mass.) 163 NE 651.

[d] What law governs.—Where the rule that delivery of a note by a debtor to his creditor raises a presumption of payment is not the law of the state where the creditor resides and where the note was accepted it is not applicable unless the contract was to be performed in Massachusetts. [§ 217] (2) Of Third Person. In most jurisdictions,[90] where a debtor gives to his creditor a bill, acceptance, or note of a third person, the presumption is that the creditor does not accept it as absolute payment,[91] but that it is accepted by him merely as collateral security[92] or as conditional payment,[93] especially where the debtor guarantees payment of the obligation[94] or where the creditor retains notes of the debtor previously given by him for the amount of the debt.[95] signs or indorses such obligation[97] or guarantees payment thereof.[98]

Election to take draft rather than money. Where a person entitled to receive a payment is given his choice between payment in money and a draft of a third person for the amount, and elects to take the draft, there is a presumption that he receives it as absolute payment.[99]

Long retention of obligation. It has been considered that the retention for several years of the obligation of a third person may raise a presumption that it was accepted in payment of the debt.[1]

Presumption of payment. In a few jurisdictions where the rule is that a negotiable bill, note, or other obligation of the debtor is presumed to be accepted in payment,[2] the same presumption is held to arise where the creditor accepts the bill, note, or other obligation of a third person.[3]

[§ 218] b. Checks.[4] Ordinarily the delivery of the check of the debtor[5] or of a third person[6] will not be presumed to have been accepted as absolute payment of the debt,[7] but the presumption is that it was accepted merely as conditional payment[8] or as collateral security,[9] so that the debt is not discharged until the check is paid[10] to the creditor or some person authorized by him to receive payment.[11]

[a] Reason for rule.—"The drawer can stop payment, at any time before acceptance or payment by bank, by serving notice on the bank. This follows from the fact that a check does not assign any part of the funds that may be in the bank to the credit of the drawer; and the bank does not become liable to the payee, unless and until the bank accepts or certifies the check. . . . Furthermore, the bank may, even without right, refuse to honor the check, thus leaving the drawer liable on the original debt. The above facts must be presumed to be known to both parties to the check; and they are also presumed to know that it is within the power of one to make, and the other to require, an absolute payment." Gay v. Sundquist, 42 S. D. 327, 330, 175 NW 190.

[b] The retention of a check and failure to give notice of its dishonor does not raise a presumption that the check was received as an absolute payment. Holmes v. Briggs, 131 Pa. 233, 18 A 928, 17 AmSR 804.

[c] Contrary view.—In an action on a bill of exchange where there was a special plea denying consideration it was proved that the drawer gave the acceptor a check, and it was held unnecessary to prove payment, the court saying: "It is enough to produce a cheque if it is once shown to have been in circulation." 11. Dowdall v. Borgfeldt, 113 NYS 1069 [aff 134 App. Div. 954 mem, 118 NYS 1103 mem].

[a] Unauthorized indorsement.—In an action for goods sold and delivered, where the defense was payment and it appeared that defendant had sent plaintiff a check in payment for the goods, which was received in plaintiff's absence by a person in his employ, and that this employee forged the indorsement of plaintiff on the check and deposited it in his own bank and misappropriated the proceeds, and defendant did not produce sufficient evidence to prove that the employee was the authorized agent of plaintiff to indorse checks, it was held that, defendant having failed to show payment, plaintiff was entitled to recover. Dowdall v. Borgfeldt, 113 NYS 1069 [aff 134 App. Div. 954 mem,

Where, however, the creditor has received a check, and does not deny that he cashed it, and fails to return it or make any protest to the debtor of nonpayment, it will be presumed that he collected the money.[12]

Where the creditor procures certification of the debtor's check by the bank on which it is drawn, an implication of law arises that the debt of the drawer of the check is discharged.[13]

Where a debt has been garnished and the garnishee has paid the amount into court by its check, which has been, by the court, indorsed over to plaintiff in the garnishment proceeding, it will be presumed, as between the debtor and the original creditor, that the check was accepted as payment and was in fact paid.[14]

[§ 219] c. Surrender or Cancellation of Original Evidence of Indebtedness. It is usually considered that the presumption that a check, bill of exchange, note, or other obligation of the debtor[15] or of a third person[16] is not accepted by the creditor as absolute payment will obtain, even though the creditor surrenders or cancels the original written evidence of the indebtedness,[17] although it has been held that, where creditors surrender notes of their debtor on receiving notes of third persons for the amount, it will be presumed that the latter notes were received in payment of the debt.[18]

[§ 220] d. Transfer of Property. Where property other than money,[19] such as a chose in action,[20] is transferred by the debtor to the creditor, it will not generally be presumed that it was accepted as an absolute payment.

[§ 221] 4. Character of Transaction as Payment, Loan, or Gift. Where one person transfers money to another, there is a rebuttable[21] presumption that the transaction constitutes the payment of a debt,[22]

[b] Presumption is that property was given as collateral.—Unless there is some evidence tending to show an intention on the part of the debtor to give, and also on the part of the creditor to receive, the property in satisfaction of the debt, either in whole or in part, the law presumes that it is given only as a collateral security. "Where one pays money or delivers a check for money to another and there is no explanation of the cause rather than a loan[23] or a gift.[24] This presumption is usually applied in cases where the person transferring the money appears to be indebted to the person to whom it is transferred;[25] but it is also applicable without any direct proof as to the existence of any indebtedness as between the parties.[26] It has been considered, however, that the presumption arises only when the relation between the parties is purely of a business character[27] or where there is nothing to explain the relation between them,[28] and that intimate personal relations between the parties may create a presumption that the expenditure of money by one for the benefit of the other was intended as a gift.[29]

Where a check is given by one person to another, the presumption that the transaction constitutes a payment arises the same as though there were a transfer of actual money.[30]

Where a receipt is given for produce, it will be presumed that the produce was received in payment of an antecedent debt rather than that it was purchased.[31]

[§ 222] 5. Time of Payment.[32] It has been held that, where payment is proved or admitted, but there is no showing as to the time of payment, it will be presumed that payment was made at the maturity of the debt;[33] but it has also been considered that, where it is shown that a payment on account was made in a certain year but the particular date of payment is not shown, it will be presumed, for the purpose of giving credit to the person making such payment, that the payment was made on the last day of the year.[34] Where a person draws an order in favor of another, it will be presumed that the consideration for it was paid or secured at the time it was drawn.[35] Where it appears that a draft attached to a bill of lading was actually paid, it will be presumed that it was promptly presented and paid.[36]

[§ 223] 6. Place of Payment. Where no place of payment is designated, the presumption is that payment should be made to the creditor at his place of business or at his residence, or wherever he is found.[37]

[§ 224] 7. Mode of Payment. Under suitable circumstances, a presumption may arise that a creditor assented to a mode of payment other than an

of such payment, and if business relations only exist between the parties, the ordinary presumption is that the money was paid because it was due and owing." Miller v. Pratz, 179 Ill. A. 204, 208.

actual transfer of money to him.[38]

[§ 225] 8. Medium of Payment. In the absence of any showing to the contrary it will be presumed that the medium for payment of a debt is money,[39] and where a debt is extinguished, it will be presumed that it was discharged by the payment of money or its equivalent.[40] Where a debt or obligation is payable in a currency which has the same name, but is of different values in different countries, the currency of the country where it is payable is presumed to be intended by the parties.[41] A debt will not be presumed to be payable in gold unless such implication can be found in the language of the contract.[42] Where a payment is indorsed in the same monetary terms that are used in the evidence of indebtedness itself, the presumption is that it was intended to be credited in the same circulating medium.[43]

[§ 226] 9. To Whom Payment Made. Where it appears that a payment has been made, it will be presumed that it was made to one who was lawfully authorized to receive the money.[44] But where goods are sold by an agent, it will not be presumed that payment therefor was made to the principal unless such payment would be expected by reason of the nature of the business or the usual mode of transacting it.[45] Where a check is paid by the bank on which it is drawn, the presumption is that the payee's indorsement was regular, and that he received the money,[46] and where there are several indorsements on the check, the prima facie presumption is that payment was made to the last indorser.[47]

[§ 227] 10. By Whom Payment Made. Where it appears that a payment has been made, the presumption is that it was made by the person bound to make it rather than by a third person.[48]

[§ 228] 11. Fund from Which Payment Made. Where the drawee of a draft pays it, a presumption arises that payment was made from the funds of the drawer in the hands of the drawee.[49] Where a payment is made by representatives of the debtor, at the direction of the debtor, out of funds in their hands, it will be considered as made out of a fund over which the debtor had control rather than from a fund as to which he had relinquished all control to such representatives.[50]

[§ 229] 12. Acceptance of Payment. Where a payment has been made, there is no presumption that it was not accepted.[51]

[a] Where a debtor deposits gold dust in a bank to the credit of his creditor, it will be presumed that the creditor assented to such deposit in payment of the debt. Cook v. Robinson, 194 Fed. 753, 114 CCA 473.

[b] Deposit with third person.—Where money is deposited by the debtor with a third person for the payment of a debt, the assent of the creditor thereto, where the arrangement is beneficial for him, may be presumed when he has knowledge of such deposit, but such knowledge will not be presumed merely from proof of the transaction between the debtor and depositary. Simonton v. Minneapolis First Nat. Bank, 24 Minn. 216.

[c] Where a purchaser sold property and took a note for the price, and there was a lien upon the property at the time of the sale and the purchaser paid the price to the holder of the lien, it was held that it would be presumed that he had authority from the seller to make such payment and that it operated as a payment of the note given for the price. Hegan v. Beckley, 105 SW 969, 32 KyL 349.

52. Generally see supra §§ 84-127.

ally there is no presumption that a payment was applied to the particular obligation in suit;[53] but where there was only one indebtedness between the parties, it will be presumed that payments made were to apply thereon,[54] although such indebtedness was unmatured at the time of the payment,[55] and notwithstanding such indebtedness arose out of illegal sales.[56] The general rule is that it will be presumed that a payment was intended to be applied, or was actually applied, in such manner as was just and proper at the time when the payment was made.[57] Accordingly, it has been held that it will be presumed that a payment was intended to be applied or was actually applied to a demand admitted rather than to one in dispute;[58] to interest rather than to principal;[59] to an interest-bearing demand rather than to one not bearing interest;[60] to an unsecured debt rather than to a secured debt;[61] to the weaker of two secured claims;[62] to an existing debt rather than to one for which the debtor holds a receipt;[63] to a matured debt rather than to an unmatured debt;[64] to the oldest items of an account due at the time of payment;[65] and to the contract price of labor and materials rather than to extra items.[66] It will be presumed that the proceeds of sales of mortgaged property are applied to satisfy the mortgage debt,[67] and, where a holder of notes surrenders some, but not all, of them at the time of a payment, that the payment was made and applied on the surrendered notes.[68] Failure of a creditor to indorse payments on a note has been held to justify the presumption that it was understood that such payments were intended to be applied on other indebtedness.[69] It will not be presumed that a payment was intended to be applied on a debt not due,[70] unless there was no other indebtedness between the parties,[71] or on an alleged debt not proved to exist;[72] that money of the principal drawn from a bank by his agent was applied by the agent to any particular indebtedness;[73] or, where a creditor appropriates a payment to a particular debt, that the debtor directed application to another debt.[74] Application by the creditor on his books does not, however, raise the presumption that the debtor so applied the payment where the latter had no access to the books and had no knowledge of the application.[75] Where a debtor makes a payment to his creditor by means of checks signed by the debtor as executor of a named estate, no presumption of payment of the individual debt arises.[76]

[§ 231] 14. Acquiescence in Condition. Where a payment is conditional and the creditor fails to object, it will be presumed that he acquiesces in the condition.[77]

[§ 232] 15. Set-Off of Demands. Where cross demands exist, there is no presumption of satisfaction by setting off one against the other.[78]

[§ 233] 16. Knowledge of Facts. A payment shown or admitted to have been made will be presumed to have been made with full knowledge of all the relevant facts.[79]

[§ 234] 17. Rebuttal of Presumptions—a. In General. As a general rule, presumptions with respect to payment or nonpayment are merely presumptions of fact,[80] and, although they are controlling in the absence of evidence to the contrary,[81] they are rebuttable by evidence showing that the actual fact is otherwise than as would be presumed in the absence of any opposing evidence.[82] This rule applies to the presumptions that regular payments were in full up to the date of each payment;[83] that a debt evidenced by a written instrument which the creditor fails to produce or account for has been paid;[84] that a transfer of money was in payment of a debt rather than a gift or a loan;[85] that a debt has been paid when the acts of the parties have been inconsistent with its continued existence;[86] that items of indebtedness not included in a general settlement and accounting between the parties have been paid;[87] that a note given by a debtor to his creditor is in settlement of all debts of inferior degree then matured;[88] that a debt evidenced by a written obligation is paid where the obligation is in the possession of the obligor[89] or unpaid where it is in the possession of the obligee;[90] that the medium of payment for a debt is lawful money;[91] that services were paid for at regular intervals;[92] that the payee of a note was not indebted to the maker at the time when the note was given;[93] that debts antedating other debts proved or admitted to have been paid have also been paid;[94] that a bill

[a] Presumption rebutted.—(1) In an action to enforce a vendor's lien for the amount of a note purporting to have been given by defendant's father, for the price of land conveyed to him by plaintiff, the evidence showed that plaintiff had delayed bringing the action eleven years, and until after defendant's father and the only other witness, except plaintiff, of the transaction, had died, with no excuse for the delay, except that defendant's father disputed the claim; that, on the day of the purchase, defendant's father drew from a bank the amount of the entire price; and that plaintiff had stated to two persons that defendant's father paid for the land in full. It was held that the evidence was sufficient to rebut the presumption in favor of plaintiff arising from his possession of the note, and plaintiff could not recover. Brown v. White, (Md.) 27 A 315. (2) The presumption is sufficiently rebutted where receipts in full for all claims due to the obligee are admitted by his failure to deny their genuineness or validity. McKenzie v. Ray, 168 Cal. 618, 143 P 1018.

[b] Payments not identified.—The presumption of nonpayment arising from the payee's possession of a note is not overcome by proof of payments of money by the maker to the payee, without further showing that there were no other dealings between the parties upon which such payments might have been made. Somervail v. Gillies, 31 Wis. 152.

[c] Unauthorized surrender to obligor.—Where a bond and mortgage were in the hands of the mortgagee at the time of his death, the fact that they were surrendered to the mortgagor by a person without authority does not rebut the presumption of nonpayment. of exchange, order for the payment of money, or promissory note, of the debtor or of a third person was accepted by the creditor as payment of the debt,[95] or that a check, bill of exchange, promissory note, or other like obligation was accepted merely as collateral security or conditional payment and not as absolute payment;[96] and that a payment was applied or was intended to be applied upon a particular indebtedness.[97]

[§ 235] b. Presumption from Lapse of Time—(1) Subject to Rebuttal. The presumption of payment from lapse of time, like other presumptions of payment,[98] is merely a presumption of fact,[99] and, although it is conclusive in the absence of any

[b] Receipts "on account of rent."—The presumption of payment of previous rent arising from the production of receipts for subsequently accruing rent is not rebutted by a production of prior receipts, given in terms "on account of rent" and "for rent" only. Johnson, 108 Ind. 436, 9 NE 413; State v. Traylor, 77 Ind. A. 419, 132 NE 608. (2) Showing circumstances from which it may be inferred that the intention of the parties was that the obligation accepted should not be regarded as payment of the debt. Wallace v. Agry, 29 F. Cas. No. 17,096, 4 Mason 336; Bradway v. Groenendyke, supra; Jouchert v. Johnson, supra [in effect overr Teal v. Spangler, 72 Ind. 380; Smith v. Bettger, 68 Ind. 254, 34 AmR 256]; Appleton v. Parker, 15 Gray (Mass.) 173; Butts v. Dean, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 76, 35 AmD 389.

[b] Mistake.—(1) The presumption may be rebutted by showing that the note was taken under a misunderstanding of the facts. Wemet v. Missisquoi Lime Co., 46 Vt. 458. (2) When a party takes the note supposing that other parties are bound by it who are not, then the intention of treating it as payment is rebutted, and the party may sue upon the original debt. Bunker v. Barron, 79 Me. 62, 8 A 253, 1 AmSR 282; Wait v. Brewster, 31 Vt. 516.

[c] Proof of deceit not necessary.—Where the creditor claims that he accepted the note of a third person from the debtor as conditional payment only, it is not necessary for him to prove that he was misled by the debtor's deceit to accept the note. Brown v. Bishop, 225 Mass. 276, 114 NE 316.

[d] Indorsement by the debtor of the note of a third person, given to the creditor when the debt is created, overcomes the presumption that it was accepted as payment. Gallagher v. Ruffing, 118 Wis. 284, 95 NW 117.

[e] Loss of substantial benefit.—The presumption may be rebutted by showing that to permit it to operate would deprive the creditor of a substantial benefit. State v. Hullihan, (Ind. A.) 157 NE 282; State v. Traylor, 77 Ind. A. 419, 132 NE 608; Beach v. Huntsman, 42 Ind. A. 205, 85 NE 523; Brewer Lumber Co. v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 179 Mass. 228, 60 NE 548, 88 AmSR 375, 54 LRA 435; Curtis v. Hubbard, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 322.

[f] Loss of security.—(1) The presumption is rebutted where it is made to appear that to regard the transaction as payment would result in the creditor losing the advantage of some security. Barry v. Stone, 5 F. (2d) 769; Scott v. Edgar, 159 Ind. 38, 63 NE 452; Jouchert v. Johnson, 108 Ind. 436, 9 NE 413; State v. Hullihan, (Ind. A.) 157 NE 282; State v. Traylor, 77 Ind. Boyd, 13 Allen (Mass.) 84; Sweet v. James, 2 R. I. 270. (2) "It is well settled that the presumption of payment of a pre-existing debt by the giving of a note is met and controlled when it is shown that such a presumption would deprive the creditor of the benefit of his security." Giligian v. New England Truck Co., (Mass.) 163 NE 651, 653. (3) The presumption does not arise under such circumstances. Roy v. Bellevieu, 118 Me. 495, 108 A 70; Baldwin v. Porter, 217 Mass. 15, 104 NE 492. (4) The presumption is "not to be applied as of course to the case of a debt secured by any kind of pledge or lien." Cary Brick Co. v. Wheeler, 210 Mass. 338, 340, 96 NE 800.

[g] Loss of mechanic's lien.—Where a contract for the erection by plaintiff of a furnace in defendant's house provided that the contract price was to be paid by certain notes payable to plaintiff and by another note payable to a third person, it was held that as there was nothing in the contract to show that the notes were accepted as constituting payment in themselves, and as the note to the third person, in the hands of the creditor, would not be available without the indorsement of such third person, it would not be presumed that the creditor accepted the notes in payment and thus deprived himself of his right to a mechanic's lien on the property. Beach v. Huntsman, 42 Ind. A. 205, 85 NE 523.

[h] Indorsement not shown to afford security.—Any presumption that the creditor's taking of the debtor's note indorsed by his wife was a discharge of his prior indebtedness, and therefore a release of the creditor's lien as pledgee on the debtor's insurance policy, was overcome by the absence of any showing that the wife's indorsement afforded any adequate security for the indebtedness, together with the fact that the policy was left in the hands of the creditor for many years after the new note was given. [a] Presumption not rebutted.—The presumption that payments made on an account current are to be applied in discharge of the earliest items in the account is not rebutted by the fact that those items are for goods sold on condition that they shall not become the property of the purchaser until paid for, although a memorandum of the condition is entered by the seller in his books containing the account. evidence tending to show payment,[1] it is rebuttable,[2] its effect being merely to make a prima facie case in favor of the debtor as to payment and to place upon the creditor the burden of introducing evidence showing, or tending to show, the fact of nonpayment.[3] Nevertheless, the presumption of payment after a lapse of twenty years is a strong one,[4] and the evidence to rebut it must be satisfactory and convincing,[5] although it does not require such strong evidence to rebut the presump-

5. U. S.—Chesapeake, etc., Canal

tion as it does to take a case out of the statute of limitations.[6] As the period extends beyond twenty years the presumption of payment grows stronger[7] and the proof required to rebut it must also be stronger.[8] While it has never been definitely determined that any lapse of time will render the presumption so conclusive that it may not be rebutted,[9] it has been considered that after the lapse of thirty years or more the presumption is well-nigh conclusive,[10] although rebuttal is permissible no matter how long a period has elapsed.[11]

A statutory presumption of payment after lapse of a specified time is rebuttable,[12] unless made conclusive by the terms of the statute itself,[13] in which event the presumption must be given the conclusive effect which the statute requires.[14]

[§ 236] (2) How Rebutted—(a) In General. The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time may be rebutted by showing directly that payment has not been made,[15] or by showing facts and circumstances which account for or explain the delay of the creditor in asserting and attempting to enforce payment.[16]

"The evidence . . . must carry conviction to the mind of the court." Wilson v. Eckman, 55 Pa. Super. 403, 405.

[a] No precise rule.—"The courts have not attempted to lay down with precision how much evidence is necessary before the question of payment should be submitted to a jury. In this respect every case must stand on its own footing." Chesapeake, etc., Canal Co. v. U. S., 240 Fed. 903, 910, 153 CCA 589 [aff 250 U. S. 123, 39 SCt 407, 63 L. ed. 889].

[b] Proof of nonpayment required.—(1) To rebut the presumption the creditor must not only produce evidence of the indebtedness or satisfactorily account for its absence, but he must also introduce evidence which will convince the court or jury that the debt is still unpaid. Luther v. Crawford, 116 Ill. A. 351 [aff 213 Ill. 596, 73 NE 430]. (2) Where a testator executed a will six years before his death devising a church and lot to his daughter until the congregation paid the daughter the balance due the testator, she then to give a clear deed of conveyance to the congregation, and a devisee of the daughter, sixty-four years after the date of the will, brought ejectment for the lot, it was held that she was bound to overcome the presumption of payment by evidence not only that no payment had been made to herself or the testator's devisee, but also that no payment had been made to the testator himself during the six years between his death and the date of the will. Cannon v. Hileman, 229 Pa. 414, 78 A 932.

[c] Equally strong presumption of nonpayment must be established.—The presumption of payment from lapse of twenty years cannot be rebutted except by evidence which will create at least an equally strong presumption of nonpayment. Titusville Second Nat. Bank v. Thompson, 44 Pa. Super. 200.

[d] After death of debtor.—The requirement is especially applicable where suit is not brought until after the death of the debtor. Sheafer v. [a] Statute creating conclusive presumption.—A statute, providing that debts of a certain character shall be presumed to have been paid if suit thereon is not brought within a certain time after they become due, creates a conclusive presumption of payment. Dietemann v. Peo., 76 Colo. 378, 232 P 676 (so holding with respect to Sess. L. [1902] p 57, providing that inheritance taxes shall be presumed to have been paid if not sued for within five years after they have become due).

14. McKinney v. Freestone County, (Tex. Commn. A.) 291 SW 529, 532 [appr Cathey v. Weaver, 111 Tex. 515, 242 SW 447; Bunn v. Laredo, (Tex. Commn. A.) 245 SW 426; Pecos Mercantile Co. v. McKnight, (Tex. Civ. A.) 256 SW 933] (the statute "establishes a definite rule of evidence, the effect of which is to make final and conclusive the presumption of payment by reason of lapse of time").

[a] Contrary view.—Even though the statute provides that there shall be a conclusive presumption of payment after the lapse of a certain time, this presumption cannot apply where the facts show that the debt has not been paid. West v. Cameron County, (Tex. Civ. A.) 4 SW (2d) 111.

force his claim,[16] or which legitimately tend to create an inference that the debt has not been paid.[17] It has been considered that it is necessary to show facts which would take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations,[18] but the weight of authority is to the effect that this is not necessary.[19]

[§ 237] (b) Particular Facts or Circumstances—aa. Relationship of Parties. The fact that the debtor and creditor are relatives is usually regarded as a circumstance proper for consideration in rebuttal of the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time,[20] because such relationship may furnish a reason for not enforcing payment of the debt,[21] especially where an earlier enforcement would have caused distress to the debtor.[22] But it has also been considered that the mere fact of family relationship between the parties is not of itself sufficient to rebut the presumption,[23] and even that no particular importance should attach to such relationship.[24]

[§ 238] bb. Financial Condition of Debtor.[25] The financial condition of the debtor is a circum-

[c] Where the debtor is the administrator of the creditor's estate, this fact sufficiently accounts for his failure to sue on the obligation and prevents the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time. Burwell's Est., 91 Pa. Super. 183.

[d] Doubt as to confiscation.—A delay by a British creditor to sue, which occurred during the doubts in relation to confiscation attendant upon the American Revolution, will not be permitted to raise the presumption of payment. McNair v. Ragland, 16 N. C. 533.

[e] Assignee's ignorance of assignment.—Where a mother assigned a mortgage to her daughters and had the assignment recorded, and the daughters were unaware of the assignment until a search of the record disclosed it, and they were requested to cancel it, which was more than twenty years after the execution of the mortgage, the presumption of payment after twenty years' repose was overcome. Fischer v. Gerndt, 94 N. J. Eq. 53, 118 A 584.

[f] Explanation of delay necessary.—Even indisputable evidence that the debt has not in fact been paid will not avail against the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of twenty years, unless the delay is sufficiently accounted for or explained. [b] That notes were treated as part of the assets of the payee's estate in the probate court is a fact which may rebut the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time. Buckley v. Runge, (Tex. Civ. A.) 136 SW 533.

[c] Statutory requirements.—Where a statute providing for a presumption of payment after the lapse of twenty years further provides that such presumption may be repelled by "competent proof" of an acknowledgment, it is for the court to say what circumstances are sufficient to repel the presumption; but where the statute provides that the presumption may be rebutted "by proof of payment of some part, or by proof of a written acknowledgment," this excludes every description of rebutting evidence except that mentioned. "This presumption, though rebuttable, has a much stronger foothold than to be overthrown by a mere balance of probabilities or by an adverse conclusion or belief deduced simply from the weight of testimony. . . . The facts relied on for this rebuttal must be stronger than mere belief deduced from the weight of testimony being on that side. They must be of a character which would revive an unsealed note barred by the statute of limitations." Boyce v. Lake, supra.

Talbot v. Hathaway, 113 Me. 324, 327, 93 A 834.

[b] The presumption of payment of a mortgage debt after the lapse of twenty years may be controlled by any kind of evidence tending to show that the note has not been paid, and it is not necessary that any unequivocal recognition of the debt be made. [a] Mere kinship between a mortgagor and a mortgagee, although accompanied by intimate confidential relations, does not prevent the presumption of payment after twenty years. Swinley v. Force, 78 N. J. Eq. 52, 78 A 249.

24. Spencer v. Hurd, 201 Ala. 269, 77 S 683, 1 ALR 761; Devereux's Est., 6 Pa. Dist. 195, 19 Pa. Co. 267.

"All arguments based upon the relationship of the parties as affecting the presumption of payment may be thrown aside. That species of reasoning is always illusive, because it works with equal efficiency in either direction. A son would not be likely to harass his parent with demands for payment which the father was unable to meet, and this circumstance would favor the presumption of nonpayment. On the other hand, a father, in failing fortunes, would be tempted to protect his son even at the expense of other creditors, and this would strengthen the theory of payment." Devereux's Est., supra.

[a] The fact that a mortgagor and mortgagee were closely related does not affect the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of twenty years during which the mortgagee took no action and the mortgagor recognized no liability. Spencer v. Hurd, 201 Ala. 269, 77 S 683, 1 ALR 761.

25. As circumstance aiding to stance bearing upon the probability of payment of the debt.[26] Insolvency of the debtor may, of itself, rebut the presumption of payment;[27] and poverty or financial embarrassment of the debtor is a circumstance tending to rebut the presumption,[28] although, according to some authorities, it is not, of itself, where it falls short of actual insolvency, sufficient as a conclusive rebuttal.[29] It is usually considered that, in order for insolvency to rebut the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time, it must be shown that the insolvency continued throughout the entire period relied on to raise the presumption,[30] but it has also been held that proof of insolvency for a long period rebuts any presumption of payment during that period, and if the remaining time, as to which no proof is made, is not alone sufficient to raise the presumption, it does not arise.[31]

In the case of joint debtors, proof of the insolvency of one only does not repel the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time.[32]

Secured indebtedness. It has been held that, when the indebtedness is secured by mortgage or other security, proof of the continuous insolvency of the debtor will not rebut the presumption of payment, as the debtor's insolvency cannot affect the creditor's power to enforce payment,[33] but in other cases no distinction has been made between secured and unsecured indebtedness.[34]

[§ 239] cc. Obligee's Possession of Obligation. While the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time is stronger than the presumption of nonpayment arising from the obligee's possession of an obligation for the payment of money,[35] the presumption from lapse of time may be rebutted where the obligation remains in the possession of the obligee and there are other circumstances tending to show nonpayment.[36]

Where the debtor is a corporation, the creditor's possession of the obligation is more effective to rebut the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time than would be the case if the debtor were an individual.[37]

[§ 240] dd. Acknowledgment by Debtor. The presumption of payment arising from lapse of time may be rebutted by the fact that, within the period prior to the action necessary to create such presumption,[38] the debtor has made an unqualified acknowledgment or admission[39] of the existence and justice

In re Bartram, 282 Pa. 536, 538, 128 A 511.

[b] Ability to pay debt sued on.—If a debtor has had the means or ability to pay the debt sued for during twelve or fifteen years before suit is brought, this is sufficient to meet the effect of reputed insolvency, which was relied on to repel the presumption of payment from the lapse of time, although he may not have been able to pay his other debts during that time. Walker v. Wright, 47 N. C. 155.

[c] Never able to pay.—The presumption is rebutted where the evidence goes to the extent of showing that from the time of the creation of the debt the debtor never had sufficient money or property with which to pay it. Devereux's Est., 6 Pa. Dist. 195, 19 Pa. Co. 267, ("The evidence, while uncontradicted, is a flat bar to the presumption of payment, because it proves as a substantive fact that payment was impossible. It makes out a case not merely of insolvency, for, as was said in Griffith's Estate, 14 W. N. 496, 'a man may pay one creditor and be unable to pay ten creditors;' nor of poverty, for a debtor may impoverish himself by paying the very debt which is in controversy, but a case in which, after the entry of the judgment, no fund was in existence out of which it could be satisfied").

[c] The lapse of twenty years between maturity of the debt and the acknowledgment does not prevent the rebuttal of the presumption of payment by an acknowledgment made within twenty years prior to the commencement of the action. Eby v. Eby, 5 Pa. 435.

[a] An admission of nonpayment in a pleading may overcome the presumption of payment from lapse of time. Palethorp's Est., 14 Pa. Co. 287.

[b] Failure to deny allegation.—It may be shown in rebuttal of the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time that in a former action of the claim,[40] and that it is still due and unpaid,[41] although such acknowledgment or admission was not accompanied by any promise to pay the debt,[42] or even though it was accompanied by a declaration of intention not to pay[43] or a refusal to pay.[44]

Necessity of writing. The acknowledgment need not be in writing in order to rebut the common-law presumption of payment,[45] but in the case of a statutory presumption it has been held that the acknowledgment must be written in order to be effective.[46]

An acknowledgment made to a third person is usually regarded as sufficient to rebut the presumption of payment,[47] although an admission that the debt is unpaid will not be as readily implied from vague and equivocal language addressed to a stranger as from language addressed to the creditor in reply to a demand for the debt.[48] But it has also been held that the presumption cannot be rebutted by an acknowledgment which was not made to the creditor or to his agent or anyone acting in his be-between the same parties it was alleged in the complaint that the debt was unpaid and such allegation was not denied in the answer. Grant v. Gooch, 105 N. C. 278, 11 SE 571.

[c] A general direction in the will of a debtor for the payment of his debts is not such an acknowledgment of, or promise to pay, any particular debt as will prevent the arising of a presumption of payment from lapse of time. Martin v. Gage, 9 N. Y. 398.

[d] Inquiry as to purchase of judgment.—In an action brought in 1885, to revive a judgment obtained in 1861, evidence that the judgment debtor came to the judgment creditor in 1870, and asked him what sum he would take for his judgment, does not show such an acknowledgment that the debt is due and unpaid as to defeat the presumption of payment. Colvin v. Phillips, 25 S. C. 228.

[e] Recording a defeasance bond ten years after recording the deed is not an admission that the mortgage debt has not been paid, but is to be construed as an act in support of the mortgagor's title. Short v. Caldwell, 155 Mass. 57, 28 NE 1124.

[f] Express acknowledgment required.—"Such an acknowledgment must be an express acknowledgment of an existing debt." Hudson v. Williams, 22 Del. 550, 554, 72 A 985.

[a] Reason for rule.—An acknowledgment by a debtor of the existence of a debt, made to a third person, is "a statement against interest which stands as evidence of a fact." Swinley v. Force, 78 N. J. Eq. 52, 64, 78 A 249.

[b] Admission after lapse of twenty years.—Assuming, without deciding, that a distinct and unequivocal acknowledgment of the existence of the debt, made by the debtor to a stranger, even though without the intent that such acknowledgment shall be communicated to the creditor, may avoid the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time, an acknowledgment made to a stranger under such circumstances, after the lapse of twenty years, "is entitled to comparatively little evidentiary force and standing by itself would not avail to rebut the presumption." Swinley v. Force, 78 N. J. Eq. 52, 65, 78 A 249.

48. Wilson v. Eckman, 55 Pa. Super. 403.

[a] Recital in mortgages.—Where the heirs of a decedent executed a conveyance of his land to one of their number, charging the land with a certain sum, the interest to be paid to decedent's widow during her life and the principal to the heirs after her death, a reference by the grantee to the land as subject to dower in a mortgage to a stranger is not sufficient to rebut a statutory presumption of payment of a ground rent or other charge on realty after twenty-one years without payment thereon or acknowledgment of its existence. In re De Haver, 215 Pa. 549, 64 A 779.

[b] Admission not connected with indebtedness sued on.—A letter written by the obligor in a bond to a third person acknowledging that he is in debt, but in no way connecting the indebtedness mentioned in the letter with the bond sued on, is not sufficient to prevent the presumption of payment of such bond arising from lapse of twenty years. Alston v.

half, and was not intended to be communicated to him or to influence his conduct.[49]

An acknowledgment by one coöbligor, made in the absence of another coöbligor, has been held insufficient to rebut, as to the latter, the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time,[50] but it has also been held that an admission by one executor that a legacy has not been paid is sufficient to rebut the presumption of payment as to all the executors.[51]

[§ 241] ee. Part Payment. A part payment by the debtor within the period prior to the commencement of the action which is relied on to raise a presumption of payment rebuts any such presumption,[52] or, as it has been expressed, fixes a new date from which the full period necessary to create a presumption of payment of the balance must run.[53]

An entry of part payment made by the obligee, without other evidence tending to show that it was made at a time when it was against his interest to make such entry, is not of itself sufficient to repel the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time.[54]

Credits indorsed upon a written obligation for the payment of money may defeat the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time,[55] if, but not unless, it is made to appear that such indorsements were made by the creditor before the expiration of the period required to raise the presumption and at a time when it was against the interest of the creditor to make them.[56]

Acknowledgment of right to set-off. An acknowledgment of the holder of an obligation, without the knowledge of the obligee, that the latter is entitled to a set-off, is not a part payment which will defeat the presumption of nonpayment arising from lapse of time.[57]

Part payment by one obligor, within the period prior to the action necessary to create the presumption, is usually held sufficient to rebut the presumption with respect to coöbligors,[58] but it has been held that, after the death of one of several joint

[a] Reason for rule.—"A partial payment made within the twenty-year period surely is a sufficient 'explanation.' It is unexplained delay to enforce any right under the mortgage continuously for twenty years which establishes the presumption." Swinley v. Force, 78 N. J. Eq. 52, 69, 78 A 249.

[b] A payment of interest (1) will have the same effect. Chubb v. Patchin, 20 OhNPNS 338; Simpson v. Broomall, 1 Del. Co. (Pa.) 229; Jennings v. Parr, 62 S. C. 306, 40 SE 683; Dickson v. [c] A part payment by a mortgagor upon the indebtedness secured by the mortgage will rebut any presumption of payment which might otherwise have arisen in favor of his grantee of the equity of redemption. Hughes v. Edwards, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 489, 6 L. ed. 142; Emlen v. Middleton, 5 Leg&InsR (Pa.) 4; Nixon v. Bynum, 17 S. C. L. 148.

[d] Part payment by heirs or devisees upon the bond of their ancestor does not rebut the presumption of payment as against the estate. Gibson v. Lowndes, 28 S. C. 285, 5 SE 727; Blake v. Quash, 14 S. C. L. 340.

[e] Part payment by an assignee (1) in bankruptcy may be sufficient. Belo v. Spach, 85 N. C. 122; Hamlin v. Hamlin, 56 N. C. 191. (2) Payment of a dividend to the creditor by the assignees of an insolvent debtor, in the ordinary execution of their trust, is not such a part payment of the debt as will repel the presumption of payment from the lapse of twenty years. Boardman v. De Forest, 5 Conn. 1.

[f] Credit given by creditor.—The fact that the creditor, after the maturity of the debt, becomes indebted to the debtor, and of his own accord and without any agreement with his debtor credits the amount thereof upon the debt from the debtor to himself, cannot be considered such a part payment by the debtor as to rebut the presumption of payment. Vaughan v. Marshall, 6 Del. 604.

[g] Receipts given by a beneficiary for interest to which he was equitably entitled, paid on bonds in the hands of a commissioner in equity, prevent the presumption of payment attaching to the bonds. Jennings v. Parr, 62 S. C. 306, 40 SE 683.

[b] A mere formal entry on the record by the holder of a mortgage of a credit on account will not defeat the presumption. Merchants', etc., Nat. Bank v. Hunter, 113 S. C. 394, 102 SE 720.

57. Woodhouse v. Simmons, 73 N. C. 30, 33 ("A part payment is necessarily made by the obligor or with his privity. It may be fairly construed as an acknowledgment of the bond as a valid subsisting debt, and as equivalent to a promise to pay the residue. But this cannot be said of an appropriation by the obligee alone, and without the privity of the obligor, of a set-off in favor of the obligor, as a part payment on a bond. This is exclusively the act of the obligee, of which the obligor has no knowledge, and it cannot be held as an acknowledgment by him of the validity of the debt, or as his promise to pay it").

Williams, 22 Del. 550, 72 A 985 (in an action on a note executed to plaintiff's intestate by defendant and another, and more than twenty years overdue, testimony by plaintiff that intestate got some oyster shells from the other maker of the note, which were to be applied in part payment thereof, was inadmissible).

[a] Reason for rule.—"If such payment be made by one of several joint obligors, it enures to the benefit of all, and is regarded as the act of all. They all have a common interest that the payment should be made, and they are all, therefore, bound by it." Dickson v. Gourdin, 29 S. C. 343, 351, 7 SE 510, 1 LRA 628.

[b] Payment by assignee in bankruptcy.—Part payments on a bond, by the assignee in bankruptcy of one of the obligors, repel the presumption arising from lapse of time. Belo v. Spach, 85 N. C. 122.

[c] Payment by the principal on a joint and several obligation rebuts the presumption of its payment at the expiration of twenty years from maturity as to both principal and surety. Dickson v. Gourdin, 29 S. C. 343, 7 SE 510, 1 LRA 628 [exp] Dickson v. Gourdin, 26 S. C. 391, 2 SE 303, obligors, a payment by the survivor will not defeat a presumption of payment which has arisen in favor of the estate of the deceased obligor by reason of lapse of time after the maturity of the debt.[59]

[§ 242] ff. Disability of Creditor To Sue. The presumption from lapse of time may be rebutted by the fact that the creditor was under a legal disability to sue within the period or for a portion of the time.[60]

Coverture. That the period of coverture should be excluded in computing the time necessary to raise a presumption of payment has been both asserted[61] and denied.[62]

Infancy. With respect to an infant creditor it has been held that the period runs from the maturity of the debt[63] and also that it does not begin to run until the creditor attains majority.[64]

Existence of state of war. Where a state of war has existed between the countries of which the debtor and creditor respectively are citizens or subjects, and by reason thereof the creditor has been unable to enforce his claim by civil action, this fact may rebut the presumption of payment which otherwise would have arisen from lapse of time,[65] or, as it has been expressed, the period during which the state of war existed is to be excluded in computing the period necessary to give rise to the presumption.[66] As between citizens of the same country, the period of the war is not to be deducted if the courts were open to the creditor, as the creditor's remedy to enforce his claim was not suspended,[67] although the fact that war was flagrant in the neighborhood where the creditor and the debtor resided, during a part of the time relied on to raise the presumption of payment. may be considered in rebuttal of the presumption,[68] and may justify the exclusion of such time in the computation of twenty years, where, during that time, the courts were closed to the creditor.[69]

Suspension of statute of limitations. It has been both asserted[70] and denied[71] that the period during which the statutes of limitations were suspended in consequence of the Civil War should be excluded in computing the period necessary to raise a presumption of payment.

[§ 243] gg. Nonresidence or Absence—(aa) Creditor. Nonresidence of the creditor does not affect the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time.[72]

[§ 244] (bb) Debtor. With respect to the effect of nonresidence or absence of the debtor on the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time the cases are not in accord.[73] Some authorities hold that, under such circumstances, the presumption is rebutted[74] whether the debtor is in an adjoining or a remote state,[75] although the absence from the state of one of two joint debtors will not repel the presumption where the other debtor is within the state and accessible.[76] Other authorities hold that such absence or nonresidence of the debtor does not, of itself, affect the presumption,[77] although it may, in connection with other circumstances, be effective in rebuttal.[78]

[d] A recovery of judgment against one obligor does not rebut the presumption of payment as against another obligor. Langston v. Shands, 23 S. C. 149 [appr on this point Hall v. Woodward, 26 S. C. 557, 2 SE 401].

C. 481, 43 AmR 618 (where the court, being of the opinion that the presumption could be rebutted only by circumstances which would take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations, held that it was error to charge that the presumption could be rebutted by proof of such fact as the lunacy of plaintiff).

[a] Reason for rule.—The presumption of payment from lapse of time is not grounded on any supposed punctuality of the debtor in the payment of his debts, but is founded on the fact that the creditor has the power of compelling a performance, and after the lapse of twenty years the law will presume that he has done it. [a] Occasional absences.—The fact that during the twenty years the debtor made several trading voyages to the West Indies and back would not justify the jury in taking the times of such absences into account, in order to repel the presumption of payment. Boardman v. De Forest, 5 Conn. 1.

[b] Nonresidence must be during the last twenty years.—De Ford v. Green, 15 Del. 316, 40 A 1120.

[c] Availability of attachment.—The fact that the nonresident debtor had land within the jurisdiction which the creditor might have attached will not prevent a presumption of payment arising from lapse of time "Because one who has a just claim against a non-resident who owns property in the county of the claimant's residence does not resort to a suit by attachment to secure it, is no reason for holding that a presumption arises that his claim has been paid or satisfied. To sue out an attachment, one must furnish a bond, and the uncertainties of the litigation which might follow such action are such that a failure to so act should not be held to raise any presumption against the holder of the claim against such non-resident." the cause of action and his residence is unknown, until the commencement of a suit against him, no presumption of payment arises from lapse of time.[79]

[§ 245] hh. Death and Want of Administration. If the creditor has died, and no administration is granted on his estate for many years, the time during which there was no person to whom payment could be made is not to be included.[80] It has also been held that the presumption arising from lapse of time is rebutted where the debtor has died and there has been no administration on his estate so that there was no person against whom suit could be brought.[81]

[§ 246] ii. Demands for Payment. That a mere demand for payment by the creditor during the period relied on as creating a presumption of nonpayment will be sufficient to rebut the presumption of payment has been both asserted[82] and denied.[83]

[§ 247] jj. Proceedings To Enforce Payment. The presumption of payment resulting from lapse of time is rebutted where it is made to appear that during the period relied on to raise such presumption the creditor has instituted legal proceedings to enforce payment of his claim,[84] provided such proceedings were instituted in good faith and not merely for the purpose of rebutting the presumption,[85] and such proceedings have been prosecuted with reasonable diligence.[86]

Where a claim is reduced to judgment, there can be no presumption of payment until the lapse of the required period after entry of the judgment.[87]

In case of coöbligors the presumption of payment with respect to one obligor is not rebutted by the fact that proceedings to collect have been instituted against another obligor,[88] or even that the claim has been reduced to judgment against another obligor.[89]

[§ 248] E. Admissibility of Evidence*[90]—1. In General. Subject to the rules governing the relevancy, materiality, competency, and admissibility of evidence generally,[91] and to the rules governing proof of payment or nonpayment when the issue of payment has been properly raised,[92] any circumstance which tends to make the proposition of payment either more or less probable is relevant and admissible in evidence on the issue of payment,[93] as is evidence of every link in a chain of circumstances tending to show payment.[94] Defendant may testify that the obligation sued upon has in fact been paid,[95] as may any person who actually made

[a] Where there has been a person entitled to demand and receive payment, although, in order to sue, such person would have been required to obtain official authorization by letters of administration or otherwise, the presumption of payment arises. Idler v. Borgmeyer, 65 Fed. 910, 13 CCA 198 [writ of error dism 159 U. S. 408, 16 SCt 34, 40 L. ed. 199].

"No presumption of payment from the lapse of 20 years can arise in this case, in which the only evidence bearing upon this question is the testimony of the plaintiff's clerk that the claim was never paid, and the records showing uninterrupted attempts by the plaintiff to enforce it by judicial process." McCormick v. Eliot, 43 Fed. 469, 473.

[a] Irregular proceedings may have this effect. McCormick v. Eliot, 43 Fed. 469; Allen v. Sawtelle, 7 Gray (Mass.) 165; James v. Jarrett, 17 Pa. 370; McCullough v. Montgomery, 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 17.

[b] An unsuccessful suit may be sufficient to rebut the presumption of payment. McCormick v. Eliot, 43 Fed. 469; Allen v. Sawtelle, 7 Gray (Mass.) 165; James v. Jarrett, 17 Pa. 370, 372 [quot In re Miller, 243 Pa. 328, 90 A 77] ("Where a party has a debt against another evidenced by a specialty or a record, and to which no statute of limitation applies, the burden of proving it unpaid is not thrown upon him who claims it, even in a suit brought more than twenty years after it has become payable, if within the twenty years a fair effort, though an unsuccessful one, has been made to recover it, by suing out legal process for that purpose").

[c] An attempt to foreclose a mortgage (1) within the twenty-year period rebuts the presumption of payment which would arise from lapse of time. Loper v. Dickey, 190 Ala. 554, 67 S 255; Gay v. Fleming, 182 Ala. 511, 62 S 523. (2) Where a mortgagee has actively asserted his right to foreclose, no presumption of payment arises. Baldwin v. Cullen, 51 Mich. 33, 16 NW 191.

86. See cases supra note 84; and infra this note.

[a] Abandonment of suit.—The mere commencement of a suit which is subsequently abandoned will not rebut the presumption. Palmer v. Dubois, 8 S. C. L. 178.

[b] Case dropped from calendar.—Where an action was commenced against the debtor's estate but seven years thereafter it was dropped from the calendar by the judge and was never restored, the presumption of payment is not rebutted. Langston v. Shands, 23 S. C. 149.

87. Stockley v. Bewley, 10 Del. 587; McConnel v. Gates, 4 Pennyp. (Pa.) 377; Shaw v. Barksdale, 25 S. C. 204.

[a] Reason for rule.—"A judgment having been entered before the bar was operative, the debt passed to one of a higher grade, that of a judgment, and any future bar based on the presumption of payment from the lapse of time must run from the date of the judgment and not from that of the bond." Stockley v. Bewley, 10 Del. 587, 594.

[b] Judgment by confession.—(1) The rule applies to a judgment by confession entered pursuant to a warrant of attorney before the period necessary to raise the presumption of payment has expired. Stockley v. Bewley, 10 Del. 587. (2) But the entry of such a judgment after the period necessary to raise the presumption has elapsed will not rebut the presumption. Stockley v. Bewley, supra.

[a] Details of prior related transactions between the parties are admissible. Ottens v. Fred Krug Brewing Co., 58 Nebr. 331, 78 NW 622; Druss v. Rosen, 84 NYS 174.

[b] Source of payment.—(1) The source of the money which the debtor claims he paid the creditor at a certain time is admissible. Morgan v. Weir, 119 Ind. 178, 21 NE 656; Estes v. Fry, 22 Mo. A. 53. (2) Evidence that the sum loaned was taken from funds held by plaintiff as treasurer of a school district, and that he borrowed money from a bank to take the place of the district's money thus loaned, and paid the bank shortly after defendant claims to have paid plaintiff, is admissible upon the issue. Koltze v. Messenbrink, 74 Iowa 242, 37 NW 179. (3) Where defendant claimed that at a specified time he made a payment on a note with money borrowed from a third person, whom he had given his note therefor, the note so given, and the testimony of such third person as to the date and amount of the loan are admissible. Turrentine v. Grigsby, 118 Ala. 380, 23 S 666.

[c] The debtor's access to the safe of another with authority to take therefrom money for his needs may be shown. Supreme Tribe of Ben Hur v. Hall, 24 Ind. A. 316, 56 NE 780, 79 AmSR 262.

[d] Creditor's failure to include debt in listing assets.—(1) The fact that the creditor has failed to include the debt sued on in enumerating his assets may be admitted in evidence to show that it has been paid. Norton v. Aiken, 134 Ga. 21, 24, 67 SE 425 [cit Cyc]; Marshall v. Marshall, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 459. (2) Failure of a creditor to include a note in a tax inventory is admissible as evidence that it has been paid. Norton v. Aiken, supra; Morse v. Bruce, 70 Vt. 378, 40 A 1034.

[e] A creditor's failure to file a claim against an insolvent estate is admissible as a circumstance determining whether payment has been made. Kelly v. Hancock, 75 Ala. 229.

[f] Fact of money being in hands of maker's administrator, in connection with fact that payee's executor did not present it as a claim, is admissible as a circumstance corroborating evidence of payment. Lust v. Lust, (Mo.) 202 SW 564.

[g] Receipt of consideration by debtor.—(1) In an action on a land contract, whereby one of the parties was to receive a deed of land on payment, a deed to him was properly received in evidence as proof of payment therefor. Iowa-Minnesota Land Co. v. Conner, 136 Iowa 674, 112 NW 820. (2) But there is authority to the contrary. Roberts v. Cocke, 120 N. C. 465, 27 SE 143.

[h] Deposit in bank.—In an action on a note, when defendant asserts that before suit he deposited the amount due on the note, evidence that the money deposited in the bank was withdrawn by him on his own check is admissible to show that it was not deposited to pay the note, but for defendant's own use. Low v. Warden, 77 Cal. 94, 19 P 235.

[i] Bond to show payment of interest.—Where a note was given for the interest on a bond, and afterward another bond and note were made in lieu of the former, in an action on the latter note, the first bond is admissible in evidence to ascertain if the interest thereon had been paid otherwise than by the note. Smith v. Taylor, 39 Me. 242.

[j] Verified account of executor.—A verified account, filed by an executor for final settlement, in which he charged himself with money collected on a note given for property sold, is admissible to show payment of the note. Wharton v. Thomason, 78 Ala. 45.

[k] Order drawn on debtor.—In an action against a debtor for the whole sum originally due under a contract, an order drawn on him by his creditor, and accepted by him, is admissible in evidence. Hillyard v. Crabtree, 11 Tex. 264, 62 AmD 475.

[l] Reason for delay in suing.—In a suit on a receipt for money on deposit, when defendant denies receipt of the money, and also pleads payment of what he did receive, plaintiff may testify why she has delayed bringing suit so long. De Vay v. Dunlap, 7 Ind. A. 690, 35 NE 195.

[m] Payment by mistake.—On an issue as to whether payment of a note by the bank at which it was made payable was made by mistake, evidence offered to show that the bank's cashier applied to the maker of the note to have his account made good, so as to cover the payment of the note, and that it was only on discovery of the maker's insolvency that the cashier concluded to protest the note is admissible. Whiting v. Rochester City Bank, 77 N. Y. 363.

[n] Items of account arising more than six years before suit.—In an action to recover the balance due on a general account containing debit and credit items, it is error to exclude evidence of all items of charge, which arose more than six years before suit, since there is a presumption that the subsequent payments made within six years of the dates of such items were applied to these earlier items. Maloney v. Bartlett, 172 Pa. 284, 33 A 553.

[o] Miscellaneous circumstances held admissible.—(1) To prove nonpayment, evidence is admissible to show conduct on the part of the debtor inconsistent with the defense. Wheeler v. Thomas, 67 Conn. 577, 35 A 499. (2) Plaintiff may testify concerning an order given upon defendant to a third party and that defendant then made no claim of payment. Wheeler v. Thomas, supra. (3) Where the books in which a claimant of property seized on execution kept accounts against his vendor of the land claimed were lost, evidence that the accounts were open until the controversy in question arose is admissible on the question whether the land was paid for by extinguishing claimant's account against his vendor. Sharp v. Hicks, 94 Ga. 624, 21 SE 208. (4) The surety on a note may introduce evidence tending to show payment by the maker in having earned a commission for selling certain property for plaintiff. Padavic v. Vanderboom, 207 Ill. A. 600. (5) That settlement took place between defendant and agents of plaintiff in which every item in account sued upon was settled and satisfied. Dunn v. Stanwood, 17 Ind. 480. (6) That debt in issue was in fact paid without first showing settlement of independent joint venture between parties under agreement to pay such debt out of debtor's proceeds of such joint venture. Aultman v. Teeple, 98 Iowa 186, 67 NW 236. (7) Where it is shown that there is some connection between the debt sued upon and plaintiff's execution of a trust deed on his property some years after the creation of the debt to the sureties of his bond as guardian, in which capacity he was defendant's creditor, defendant may be permitted to introduce the trust deed in evidence to show plaintiff's motive in executing such a deed because of his claimed payment prior thereto. Shockley v. Van Eaton, 81 Iowa 417, 46 NW 1097. (8) Where plaintiff affirmatively asserts that no payments were made except those which he admits were made, and defendant denies this, claiming to have made other payments, for which he asserts a counterclaim, the latter may introduce evidence in support of his claim. Allison v. McClun, 40 Kan. 525, 20 P 125. (9) Where the payment of certain money into a bank is in dispute, it is not error to admit the testimony of the bookkeeper of the bank that he made all the entries of money received at the bank, and had made an examination of the bank books, and that they showed no such payment. Woods v. Hamilton, 39 Kan. 69, 17 P 335. (10) In an action on a note, evidence conducing to prove payment of money mentioned in an entry of credit on the note, which was subsequently erased, and the direction of the payer to appropriate it to the payment of the note, is competent. Graves v. Moore, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 341, 18 AmD 181. (11) Where, in an action of debt on a specialty, defendant gave in evidence under a plea of payment a specialty of a later date, executed by plaintiff to defendant, to rebut the presumption of payment thus arising, plaintiff may show the consideration of the latter specialty and the circumstances under which it was given. Johnson v. White, 8 Leigh (35 Va.) 214.

[a] That the debtor borrowed money to pay a debt is not admissible in evidence. Reed v. Pierson, 3 N. J. L. 681.

[b] Mere evidence of a demand of payment is not admissible to show nonpayment. Conkling v. Weatherwax, 90 App. Div. 585, 86 NYS 139 [aff 181 N. Y. 258, 73 NE 1028].

[c] Debtor's disposition of funds.—The mere fact that the debtor used money received for sale of notes belonging to plaintiff to purchase a lot in plaintiff's name, and that he built a house thereon, is not admissible in evidence to show payment in the absence of evidence that such purchase and construction were actu-

Admissions and declarations.[7] Admissions of the creditor or of his authorized agent are admissible to show payment,[8] and admissions of the debtor are admissible to show nonpayment.[9] Under the general rule[10] self-serving declarations of either the debtor or creditor are not admissible.[11] Thus an entry made by the debtor in his own favor is inadmissible to prove payment,[12] even where offered in evidence after his death.[13] Declarations of a third person not a party to the suit are not admissible.[14] Statements made by the debtor and creditor at the time of the examination of accounts and agreement on a balance due are admissible in a subsequent suit on the debt;[15] and declarations of partner to the effect that the debtor was a member of the firm are admissible to show that the creditor took a firm note under misapprehension without intending to release the debtor.[16] Declarations of defendant, if made under circumstances warranting no inference that they were made for self-serving purposes,[17] may be admissible when relevant to the issue of payment;[18] but evidence merely preliminary to the admission of ally made in payment of the debt and authorized by the creditor. Hamby v. Brooks, 86 Ark. 448, 111 SW 277. And see Husband and Wife §§ 298–300.

[d] Payment to other claimants.—Evidence that other employees on the same job at the same time were paid by the employer is not admissible to show payment to the employee seeking to recover therefor. Filer v. Peebles, 8 N. H. 226.

[e] Disproving payment of claim not in suit.—Where a witness testifies to facts tending to prove payment of the demand in suit and of other demands not in suit, it is not competent to produce one of such claims not in suit for the purpose of disproving payment of such claim. Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 718.

[f] Miscellaneous circumstances held inadmissible.—(1) Where the note sued on was pledged as collateral for another note, evidence as to the consideration of the principal note is irrelevant. Wharton v. Thomason, 78 Ala. 45. (2) In trover for conversion of a slave, evidence of value of services of a slave given to plaintiff as security for obligation, whose services were to pay interest thereon, is inadmissible in absence of claim of usury by defendant who claims payment of obligation by reason of cash payment coupled with such services. Hamer v. Harrell, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 323. (3) In an action on an account in which plaintiff attached defendant's stock of merchandise, where the only issue was whether defendant owed plaintiff anything, the return of the writ showing what articles had been attached was irrelevant. Steinfeld v. Wing Wong, 14 Ariz. 336, 128 P 354. (4) Where defendant contends that he paid plaintiff's claim by means of a check, and the bank upon which the check was drawn fails before presentment, admission of a certificate that such bank paid fifteen per cent in dividends to a third person, a depositor therein, is inadmissible as being wholly irrelevant. Campbell v. Shark, (Ida.) 267 P 458. (5) Evidence offered by defendant to show payment of an account for labor is properly excluded where there is no evidence to show that the debt sued upon had any connection with the account. Moseley v. Waite, 180 Ill. A. 408. (6) In an action on a note, testimony of defendant's bookkeeper that she saw payments made and made entries thereof in defendant's books at his direction, but did not know for what purpose the payments were made, is improperly admitted. Mugler v. Hirsch, 187 Ill. A. 279. (7) On an issue as to whether payment was made at a certain time, evidence that on other occasions the creditor had forgotten or was mistaken about the payment made to him is not admissible. Shockley v. Van Eaton, 81 Iowa 417, 46 NW 1097; Bradley v. Freed, (Tenn. Ch. A.) 51 SW 124. (8) That plaintiff was sick and prostrated because of the condition of his accounts about the time the action was commenced, and five years after the date of the claimed payment, is not admissible. Shockley v. Van Eaton, supra. (9) In an action against an executor on a note assigned by his testator, evidence that any person had agreed to pay for the testator is not admissible to show payment. Abercrombie v. Sheldon, 8 Allen (Mass.) 532. (10) In an action on a note executed by defendant's testator, evidence that testator had made a list of his debts, in which the note in question was not included, is not admissible to show payment of the note in question. Abercrombie v. Sheldon, supra. (11) In a suit by a banker against the acceptor of a bill, the fact that the drawer had an account with the banker, and that after protest of the bill there were balances in favor of the drawer, was not admissible as evidence in favor of the acceptor to show a payment or satisfaction by the drawer. Citizens' Bank v. Carson, 32 Mo. 191. (12) Conversation of agent of plaintiff with banker in depositing receipt in anticipation of payment by defendant, and conversation of agent of defendant with same banker when actually making payment for defendant. Crowley v. Gossett, 32 Mo. A. 17. (13) In an action by an administrator to recover upon a receipt and duebill found among the papers of his intestate, where defendant's evidence tends to show that he paid a portion of the amount named in the receipt and gave the duebill for the balance and had subsequently paid the duebill in full, a letter written by defendant to the intestate in reference to a sum of money handed by him to the intestate, which has no connection with the payments claimed to have been made to defendant and contains no language indicating that it was to be applied upon the receipt, is not competent as evidence on behalf of plaintiff to attack defendant's theory that the bill was given for the balance unpaid on the receipt. Fisk v. Fisk, 60 N. Y. 631. (14) Evidence is not admissible to show by the records that the creditor had not listed the note sued on for purposes of taxation where it appears that no tax return was ever made by him. Young v. Doherty, 183 Pa. 179, 38 A 587. (15) Evidence that in other instances the creditor had attempted to assert unjust claims is inadmissible. Young v. Doherty, supra. (16) Testimony as to the result of computations tending to show payment is not admissible where the testimony shows the data on which the results were based, the results being only arithmetical reckonings. 18. Dunham v. Cox, 81 Conn. 268, 70 A 1033.

[a] Defendant's declaration of intention.—Evidence that defendant in taking certain money from a safe declared that he was about to take such such declarations, although admissible when offered for such purpose,[19] is not admissible when not so offered,[20] nor under a claim that it is part of the res gestæ of the fact of payment,[21] nor under a claim that it is relevant to the time of payment when such time is not in issue.[22]

Documentary evidence,[23] although not reciting payment, may be admissible as a fact, having some tendency, however slight, to show payment,[24] but such evidence is inadmissible where it has no circumstantial bearing upon the issue of payment.[25] A book of account is generally held inadmissible to prove, from the absence of an entry therein, that certain money was not paid,[26] although there is authority to the contrary.[27]

Judicial records bearing on the issue of payment are admissible.[28]

Parol evidence is admissible to show that a debt has been paid, although the debt is evidenced by a writing.[29]

[§ 249] 2. Payment by or to Third Persons. Evidence of payment by a third person is inadmissible,[30] unless it is also shown that it was made for the debtor and accepted by the creditor as payment.[31] In the same manner, evidence of payment to a third person not shown to be authorized by the creditor to accept payment is not admissible,[32] unless shown to be made with the creditor's consent.[33] But payment of certain amounts of money to the attorneys of the creditors to be applied on the debt may be shown,[34] and defendant may show payment to an employee of claimant,[35] or to claimant's wife.[36]

[§ 250] 3. Financial Condition of Parties[37]—a. Of Debtor. The admissibility of evidence as to the debtor's financial condition has been held to be within the reasonable discretion of the trial court.[38] Although it has been held that evidence of the debtor's ability to pay is not admissible to show payment,[39] there is substantial authority that evidence money to pay plaintiff may be admissible as relevant to the issue of payment. Dunham v. Cox, 81 Conn. 268, 70 A 1033.

20. Dunham v. Cox, supra.

[a] Thus, mere evidence that a certain conversation related to defendant's business is not admissible without a claim that it is preliminary to the admission of evidence of defendant's declaration of an intention to pay plaintiff with money he then took from a safe. Scriber, 48 Or. 561, 87 P 887, 90 P 1002 (holding that, where defendant bank cashier testified that at various times he deposited sums to the credit of plaintiff, and offered in evidence deposit slips, made out in his handwriting, which he testified he took from the bank files, it not being shown that any of them were ever delivered to the bank or that it became liable for such deposits, the slips were incompetent evidence); Butler v. Hall, 124 N. C. 626, 32 SE 964 (holding that in an action for goods sold, where the defense is payment, plaintiff may show by his bookkeeper, in corroboration of his own testimony, that the amount has not been paid, his usage in regard to his system of entries in his books, when checks and money have been received, and that the books fail to show any evidence of payment).

Gray v. Herman, 75 Wis. 453, 44 NW 248, 6 LRA 691. (2) Evidence of the payment or settlement of a claim by a third person, who is deeply interested therein, and an acceptance of it by the creditor in satisfaction of the debt, is admissible. Porter v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 99 Iowa 351, 68 NW 724. (3) Evidence is admissible to show payment by a third person, not a party to the contract out of which the claim arose and not in privity with the debtor, where such payment is accepted by the creditor. Bradley, etc., Co. v. McLaughlin, 87 Okl. 34, 208 P 1032. (4) Testimony is admissible to defeat a counterclaim that demand recovered by defendant in a former suit against a third party was the debt of the present plaintiff and was paid to defendant. [a] Reasons for rule.—(1) "Extending to show that defendant had money from which a claimed payment might have been made is admissible to show that fact.[40] Where plaintiff has introduced proof of defendant's inability to pay, evidence of his possession of the means of payment is admissible in rebuttal.[41] Evidence of the debtor's inability to pay is admissible to show nonpayment,[42] although there is authority that such evidence may be admitted only to show that the debtor had not paid all his debts,[43] and is not admissible to show that he had not paid a particular debt.[44] Evidence of the bad financial condition of the debtor at the time the contract was made is admissible on the issue as to whether payment was to be made before or after delivery of the property contracted for.[45] Where payment is alleged to have been made from the salary of the debtor, evidence as to the amount of salary received by him is admissible to disprove his testimony.[46]

[§ 251] b. Of Creditor. Evidence that the creditor's financial condition was necessitous is admissible to show payment.[47] The creditor may be asked what money or means he had preceding, at the time of, and within a reasonable period following the transaction when payment was claimed to have been made, and the sources from which he derived money subsequently gained.[48] But evidence of the amount of money the creditor had shortly before his death is not admissible to show a payment made at that time.[49] Evidence that the creditor had funds of the debtor in his possession after the maturity of the debt is admissible to show payment,[50] and to show nonpayment it may be proved that the creditor made no considerable deposits in any of the banks where she did business at the time of the claimed payment.[51]

[§ 252] 4. Habits of Parties as to Promptness.[52] Although it has been variously held that the admissibility of evidence of the debtor's business habits is within the discretion of the trial court,[53] and that evidence of the debtor's habit of promptness in paying his bills is admissible to show payment,[54] the prevailing view is that such evidence is not admissible.[55] Evidence that defendant at other times and with other persons had delayed payment of bills is not admissible to show nonpayment.[56]

[§ 253] 5. To Explain Reception of Commercial Paper or Property[57]—a. In General. To determine whether the delivery of a commercial paper by the debtor amounts to absolute payment, evidence of the intention of the parties is admissible.[58] Further, to prove that a bill, note, or check was received as an perience is not sufficiently uniform to raise a presumption that one who has the means of paying a debt will actually pay it." Atwood v. Scott, 99 Mass. 177, 178, 96 AmD 728. (2) "The fact of the reputed wealth of the defendant, and his supposed ability to pay whenever called upon, might have furnished the very reasons operating on the plaintiff's mind to allow the note to remain uncollected." (2) In an action on a note, where the defendants pleaded payment and contended that they were abundantly able to pay the claim at any time within eight years of the commencement of the action, a question as to how much mortgage there was on their farm was relevant and competent. Hasper v. Weitcamp, 167 Ind. 371, 79 NE 191. (3) Evidence that the debtor was loaning his own money at interest at the time of the claimed payment is admissible to show payment. McAllister v. Chambers, 71 Wash. 521, 129 P 85. (4) It may be shown that the deceased debtor assembled his children and divided his property among them prior to his death. McAllister v. Chambers, supra. (5) Where, in an action to establish a claim against a decedent's estate for services rendered in managing a bakery of decedent, the evidence showed that decedent had not been indebted to claimant in any way other than for such services, and that claimant was a married man, and that his principal work was that of baker, evidence that during the period covered by the bill for services he had received from decedent checks which he had cashed or had deposited to his credit was admissible to show payment. [a] Illustrations.—(1) Evidence is admissible to show that a note had been given by the creditor, and absolute payment, evidence of an express agreement to that effect is admissible,[59] and, in the absence of an express agreement,[60] evidence is admissible as to the circumstances attending the transaction[61] as well as to the subsequent acts and conduct of the parties.[62] Evidence is also admissible on behalf of the creditor to show that a bill, note, or check accepted by the creditor was not taken as an absolute payment.[63] Where the note of a third person is given to the creditor, evidence is admissible to show fraudulent misrepresentations of the debtor that the maker of the note was solvent,[64] or to show his knowledge of such insolvency at the time the note was transferred and his concealment of such fact from the creditor.[65]

[§ 254] b. As Payment or Security.[66] To show that a bill or note was given in payment of a debt, rather than as collateral security, evidence of the circumstances attending the transaction,[67] as well as of the subsequent conduct of the creditor,[68] or of the debtor,[69] is admissible. On the other hand, evidence which shows that commercial paper was taken as security, and not in payment, may be admitted.[70] Evidence of the debtor's insolvency is admissible to show that the creditor had refused to accept as payment a note claimed to have been given in discharge of the debt, but rather had accepted it as security.[71] Evidence which in no sense throws any light upon the issue of whether a bill or note was accepted as payment or security is not admissible.[72] Parol evidence is admissible to show that an assignment, although absolute on its face, was taken simply as security;[73] evidence is admissible to show that a transfer of property by the debtor to the creditor was made as security only, and not as payment;[74] and it may be shown that a mortgage upon the debtor's property was given merely to secure the purchase price of other property purchased and not in payment.[75]

[§ 255] 6. To Aid or Rebut Presumption from Lapse of Time—a. In General. The presumption of payment arising from the lapse of time[76] may be fortified or rebutted by circumstances,[77] and the greatest liberality, consistent with the rule of evidence, should be indulged in in the proof of circumstances relevant to the question of aiding or rebutting this presumption.[78] Evidence fairly tending to support or rebut the presumption is admissible,[79] as is testimony explaining and contradicting evidence tending to support or rebut such presumption,[80] although, under some of the statutes,[81] the evidence which may be given in rebuttal is limited.[82] Any competent evidence, which tends to show that the debt is in fact unpaid is admissible for the pur-accepted by the debtor, not in payment, but as a matter of bookkeeping, and that such was the intention of the parties. Schneider Marble Co. v. Knight, 37 Ga. A. 646, 141 SE 420. (2) On an issue as to whether a note was accepted as absolute payment, the creditor may testify as to the intent with which he took the note. Kruse v. Morey v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 14 N. Y. 302.

pose of rebutting the presumption of payment;[83] and any evidence, the legitimate tendency of which is to render it more probable than otherwise, in the judgment of the jury, that payment has not been made, is admissible to repel the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of time.[84] Documentary evidence is admissible even though it shows the existence of a debt presumed to be paid from lapse of time, since the presumption may be afterward rebutted by other evidence.[85] Where lapse of time less than twenty years is relied on to raise a presumption of payment, evidence of conduct of the creditor inconsistent with the supposition of payment should not be excluded, although connected with a different matter from that in suit.[86] Evidence that the creditor has other notes of the debtor which he had not sued on, although they were many years overdue, throws no light on the question of payment and is inadmissible to rebut the presumption of payment from long delay.[87]

Admissions.[88] The evidence to rebut the presumption may consist of the debtor's admissions made to the creditor himself,[89] to his agent, or to a stranger,[90] but to overcome the presumption of payment from the lapse of time of more than twenty years, the creditor cannot introduce part only of defendant's affidavit of defense.[91]

[§ 256] b. Financial Condition of Parties.[92] To aid presumption. Although there is authority that to raise or aid the presumption of payment from lapse of time evidence of the debtor's ability to pay is not admissible,[93] the general rule is that to aid the presumption it may be shown that the debtor was able to pay,[94] or that he had the means of payment,[95] or that he was solvent.[96] Further, in aid of the presumption, evidence is admissible of the indigent circumstances of the creditor,[97] or of his financial embarrassment.[98]

To rebut presumption. To rebut the presumption, evidence is admissible on behalf of the creditor to show that the debtor had not the means[99] or opportunity[1] of paying the debt during the period of time claimed to raise the presumption of payment.

[§ 257] c. Habits of Parties as to Promptness.[2] To aid the presumption of payment from lapse of time the debtor may introduce evidence of his promptness in paying his debts,[3] and evidence of the character of the creditor for promptness in collecting his debts is admissible in aid of the presumption,[4] although there is authority to the contrary.[5]

[§ 258] 7. Medium of Payment—a. In General. Evidence is admissible to show that the agreement was to pay in a certain medium[6] or that a certain medium was accepted as payment,[7] but the creditor may also show that such an acceptance was under protest.[8] Where payment is claimed to have been

[a] Insolvency in connection with other circumstances.—Where a debtor relies upon the presumption of payment from the lapse of time, and the creditor endeavors to rebut that presumption by showing his insolvency, the creditor may also offer in evidence the circumstance of the debtor's living at a great distance from him, as tending to show that, although the debtor may have had property for a short time, yet the creditor had not an opportunity of knowing that fact and of getting satisfaction out of that property. [c] Where payment in goods is alleged, general evidence of the delivery of goods by the debtor to the creditor is admissible. Henry v. Scott, 3 Ind. 412.

[d] Transfer of accounts and claims.—Evidence that plaintiff received from defendant accounts and claims for collection and in payment, to a much larger amount than the debt sued on, is admissible as an initial step toward proving payment, that is, toward showing actual collection by plaintiff of such claims and accounts in payment of defendant's debt. made by rendition of services,[9] the character of such services may be shown;[10] but evidence that the debtor had been paid for such services other than by credits upon his indebtedness may also be admitted.[11] Generally, evidence to show that a written instrument is payable otherwise than its terms indicate is inadmissible;[12] nor is evidence admissible to show that payment was intended in a particular medium where the instrument upon which the action is based fails to specify such a medium.[13] But where a statute defines the meaning of "current lawful money," parol evidence is inadmissible to show what kind of money was intended in a contract using such phrase.[14] And it has been held that it may be shown the parties had expressly agreed upon the medium of payment, although the instrument sued upon purports to be payable in dollars generally;[15] and evidence has been held to be admissible to show that an agreement worded for payment "in dollars" was intended to mean payment in Confederate dollars.[16] Evidence that a certain kind of money was the only currency generally in circulation in a certain locality at the time of a certain payment is admissible to establish a payment in such currency to corroborate other evidence tending to the same end.[17] Evidence that brokers and merchants refused to receive bank bills when presented by the creditor, which he had received from the debtor in discharge of a debt, is admissible to show a failure of payment in that they were not current or available to the creditor as money.[18]

[§ 259] b. Value of Medium. Where it is claimed that payment was agreed to be made in a certain medium, evidence of its value is admissible;[19] and where property is delivered in part payment of a debt, evidence is admissible on behalf of the debtor to show its value at the place of delivery, in the absence of any agreement as to the price.[20] Where the question is whether certain personalty was transferred with land in payment of a debt, evidence of the value of the land is admissible.[21] Where payment is agreed to be made in the money of an unrecognized foreign government, evidence of a decree of such government fixing the value of such currency is not admissible.[22] Where the obligation was payable in Confederate money and an action was brought after the close of the Civil War, evidence has been held to be admissible to show the value of the specified sum in lawful money.[23] Under the scaling statutes passed in some of the Confederate states after the Civil War, making the value of property sold during a specified period of the war the basis of liability,[24] it is competent to show what estimate was put on the property by the parties themselves at the time of the sale.[25] Where the statute expressly provides that evidence should be admissible of the consideration and its value of contracts made during a specified period of the war, and of the intention of the parties as to the currency in which payment was to be made, and its value at any time,[26] evidence is admissible as to the consideration for such a contract,[27] and its value;[28] and evidence of the value of Confederate currency in which payment was to be made cannot be restricted to evidence of its value at the time and place of the execution of the contract sued upon.[29]

[§ 260] 8. Application of Payments.[30] Evidence is admissible where it tends to show the application of a payment as between two or more debts.[31] Evidence of declarations of the debtor previous or subsequent to the time of payment is admissible;[32] but self-serving declarations[33] are not admissible to show a claimed application.[34] Although writings of the debtor to the creditor directing the mode of application are the best evidence,[35] the evidence to show application is not confined to evidence of express declarations.[36] Parol evidence has been held to be admissible to show the intent of the debtor, with notice of such intent to the creditor;[37] but evidence of the intent of the debtor is not admissible unless it is also shown that the intent was at the time known to the creditor.[38] A letter from the creditor to the debtor showing the application of payment, together with evidence that no objection to such application was made by the debtor, is admissible against the debtor.[39] So evidence as to the bringing of an action on one debt and its subsequent dismissal is admissible to show that the payment was not applied by the creditor to such debt where it was sufficient to cancel it.[40] Where an appropriation is to be made by the court, evidence of the debts to which the payment might be applied is admissible.[41]

[c] Recitals in a written instrument as to the balance remaining unpaid on a former indebtedness are admissible as an admission by the debtor that payments had been properly applied. Taylor v. Cockrell, 80 Ala. 236.

[d] Book entries are admissible to show that payment was on principal and not payment of interest. McAllister v. Chambers, 71 Wash. 521, 129 P 85.

[e] Agreement.—(1) An oral agreement between the parties as to application of payments may be shown as evidence of a direction by the debtor to apply payments, as specified in the agreement, to a particular obligation. Ray v. Borgfeldt, 169 Cal. 253, 146 P 679. (2) Evidence of a verbal agreement as to application of payments is admissible to show the intention of the debtor to continue such application to payments made. Clarke v. Scott, 45 Cal. 86. (3) Evidence of an agreement as to application of payment is admissible to show intent of the parties in making periodic payments. Schneekloth v. Crown Silk Mfg. Co., 120 NYS 67. (4) In an action by a subcontractor on a contractor's bond for balance due, there being an issue as to application of payments made by the contractor to plaintiff, it was competent for plaintiff, notwithstanding on checks from the contractor there was the entry "S. Contr." or "S. Hotel," that being the contract on which the bond in suit was given, to show that there was a subsisting agreement between himself and the contractor concerning the application of payments, or a working arrangement, under which plaintiff was at liberty to apply the proceeds of the checks when collected to open account, and not the S contract, if he chose to do, the entry upon the checks being a mere memorandum, capable of explanation. Long v. U. S. Fidelity, etc., Co., 178 N. C. 503, 101 SE 11.

[f] A contract other than that sued on may be read in evidence to show that payments were made on account of such other contract. Stone v. Talbot, 4 Wis. 442.

[g] Time of services rendered.—In an action for services rendered from August 28 to December 28 it is not error, on the question of application of payments, to admit evidence that there was a continuing service beginning on April 6, and that payments made were for services from April 6 to August 28. Consolidated Naval Stores Co. v. McNeill, 60 Fla. 38, 53 S 843.

[h] Payment of debt of third person.—(1) Where defendant sued on a note, claiming that plaintiff did not produce it in demanding payment, and that defendant paid by delivering two notes to D to deliver to plaintiff on production of the note, plaintiff is entitled to testify to a conversation with D showing that plaintiff received one of the notes from D in payment of an obligation owing by D. Averbuck v. Becher, 140 NYS 483. (2) Where the owner of real property paid a materialman at the request of a contractor who was erecting a building thereon, evidence is admissible to show that such owner knew that the payment was of the contractor's debt, and that he knew such payment was to be applied to the contractor's debt to the materialman for materials furnished for his property and not upon the contractor's debts to the materialman generally, and that he made the payment with such an intention. Harris v. Gilbert, 46 R. I. 350, 128 A 11.

[i] Conclusion of fact.—Where defendant, in an action on a nonnegotiable note, sets up payment by a deceased joint maker, testimony of plaintiff as to whether the payment was or was not made on the note is competent, under an objection that it called for a conclusion of fact of which the jury are the sole judges. Evans v. Deming, 2 NYSt 349.

Mullis, 28 Ga. A. 176, 110 SE 509 (evidence of certain payments held insufficient without evidence connecting them with the indebtedness sued on).

[a] Degree of proof required.—(1) Payment may be established by circumstances that would satisfy a jury that the continued existence of debt was not probable. Vickery v. Baggett, 20 Ala. A. 143, 101 S 102 [rev on other grounds 211 Ala. 610, 101 S 104]. (2) To authorize inference of payment, facts and circumstances should be inconsistent with any other reasonable hypothesis. Dorroh v. [d] Where the evidence is equally balanced, there is no preponderance. Shulman v. Brantley, 50 Ala. 81; Mullally v. Dingman, 62 Nebr. 702, 87 NW 543.

[e] Number of witnesses.—(1) Payment of an obligation over five hundred dollars may be proved by a single witness, as it is not proof of a contract or agreement of that value within the terms of the statute. De St. Romes v. New Orleans, 18 La. Ann. 210; Jones v. Fleming, 15 La. Ann. 522; O'Brien v. Flynn, 8 La. Ann. 307. (2) Where complainant files a bill to recover distributive shares of his former wards and defendant alleges payment to complainant and receipt therefor, and complainant by amended bill denies payment and alleges that the receipt was fraudulently obtained by defendant and asks that the receipt may be canceled, the answer to the amended bill denying the allegations therein and averring payment as stated in the receipt, the deposition of a single witness is insufficient to sustain the allegations of the amended bill, especially when contradicted by other circumstances. Silver v. Hedges, 3 Dana (Ky.) 439.

[f] Testimony of incompetent witness.—To sustain the burden of proof of payment there must be testimony to aid the inference other than that of a witness probably incompetent under Code (1924) § 11257, because of the death of the other party to the transaction. Slezak v. Krisinger, 202 Iowa 422, 210 NW 436.

(7) Evidence that plaintiffs at some time had in their possession a certain amount of money belonging to defendant does not show payment thereof to them in part payment of their claim against defendant. Simons v. Martin, etc., Mfg. Co., 25 Misc. 788, 54 NYS 560. (8) Evidence that a debtor ordered her agent to send the money, and, hearing nothing more about it, supposed that it was paid, is not sufficient to show payment, especially where there is inferential evidence to the contrary. McCurdy v. Middleton, 82 Ala. 131, 2 S 721. (9) The word "settled," written under an account in a book of accounts, and signed by both parties, does not of itself necessarily import payment. Reynolds v. Williams, 9 Kulp (Pa.) 380.

[i] Lapse of time.—(1) Delay by a creditor in enforcing his demands is evidence to support a plea of payment. Dowling v. Hastings, 211 N. Y. 199, 105 NE 194. (3) An unexecuted agreement by a mortgagee of realty, with two of the three mortgagors, to take the mortgaged premises in payment of the mortgage notes, is not sufficient evidence to show payment of those notes, in a suit by the mortgagee against the indorser of them. Green v. Davis, 44 N. H. 71.

49. Galvin v. Gaussen, 31 Oh. Cir. Ct. 565.

50. See cases infra this note.

[a] Checks.—(1) The presumption that plain checks constituted payments on a debt, rather than loans from the drawer to the payee, is rebutted by evidence of their nonappearance in the payee's book account against the drawer, their indorsement to wholesale merchants of whom the payee bought, and the fact that the payee was a retail merchant, and did not lend money. Moyles' Est., 7 Kulp (Pa.) 215. (2) That a certain check made by plaintiff's intestate to defendant was a loan, and not a payment, was sufficiently proved where a memorandum, in the handwriting of decedent, produced by defendant, showed a loan to defendant of the sum named in such check, on the date therein specified. Gaylord v. Gibson, 36 App. Div. 548, 55 NYS 670.

[b] Book entries held insufficient to show that check was given as a loan. Sallada v. Mock, 277 Pa. 285, ness rather than the payment of a stock dividend,[51] or as to the application of a payment to a particular debt.[52] While it has been held that evidence which is uncertain as to the time and amount of payment is insufficient to establish the fact thereof,[53] it has been held to the contrary that it is not in all cases essential to prove the exact dates and amounts of partial payments,[54] or to show the time and place[55] or manner[56] of payment.

[§ 262] 2. Admissions of Parties. Admissions of the debtor may be sufficient to show nonpayment,[57] as may admissions of the creditor or his agents to show payment.[58] Where a creditor admitted the receipt of money from his debtor, but stated it to be a loan, the admission taken together does not amount to proof of payment.[59]

[§ 263] 3. Testimony of Parties. The positive testimony of a creditor may be sufficient of itself to show nonpayment,[60] even when met by indefinite testimony of the debtor.[61] The testimony of the debtor may also be sufficient to show payment,[62] but where his testimony is contradicted by the other party,[63] or by a disinterested witness, the issue will be determined against the debtor, since he has the burden of proof.[64] Where the only testimony is that of the debtor and the creditor, which is in irreconcilable conflict, the possession by the debtor, unexplained, of the obligation evidencing the debt,

[c] Acquiescence in application by creditor to another debt.—Hawkins v. Bouic, 121 Md. 147, 88 A 126.

[d] Evidence showing that debtor had no right to direct application.—McCord v. Bridges, 209 Ala. 529, 96 S 432.

[e] Evidence showing payment not applied to another debt.—Royal Colliery Co. v Alwart Bros. Coal Co., 276 Ill. 193, 114 NE 499 [rev 198 Ill. A. 67]; Castleman v. Rustenholtz, 145 Ky. 146, 140 SW 170.

[f] Joint or several account.—(1) Evidence held not to overcome presumption that payment by person jointly liable on note, not credited on such note, was made on his individual note. Well v. Ayers, 84 Va. 341, 5 SE 21. (2) Where one indebted as a partner and individually gave his note in payment and took a receipt as follows: "Received from F. S. Brewer his ninety-day note for three hundred dollars," such receipt has no bearing one way or the other on the question whether the note was appropriated on the joint or on the several account. Hunt v. Brewer, 68 Me. 262.

[g] Slight evidence is sufficient to overcome the presumption that a preëxisting debt was settled by a payment. Lynch v. Lyons, 131 App. Div. 120, 115 NYS 227 [aff 197 N. Y. 595 mem, 91 NE 1116 mem].

[h] The misapplication of payments cannot be proved by vague and conjectural proof, in opposition to explicit denial and documentary evidence. Vimont v. Welch, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 110.

[i] A bank check in the usual form is not, even when paid and returned to the drawer, an acknowledgment that the money therein mentioned has been received for and applied to a particular purpose. Ottens v. Fred Krug Brewing Co., 58 Nebr. 331, 78 NW 622.

[j] Corroborative circumstances.—The fact that timber was mortgaged to secure the debt sued on strengthens defendant's testimony that the proceeds of the timber were paid on that debt, and not on other debts due plaintiff, and is sufficient, with such testimony, to sustain the plea of payment. Chaney v. Ramey, 43 SW 235, 19 KyL 1258.

53. Pierce v. Parks, 76 Or. 58, 147 P 929.

[a] For example, the testimony of a witness that he saw defendant pay plaintiff's intestate some money when trying to make a settlement, but could not tell how much, is insufficient to support an allegation of payment. Magenau v. Bell, 14 Nebr. 7, 14 NW 664.

Wilson, 12 N. C. 484. See Perkins v. Chambers, 49 SW 544, 20 KyL 1506 (the report of a commissioner that his predecessor had paid him a certain fund is not conclusive in the latter's favor on a plea of payment, although the reporting commissioner may be liable therefor on his bond); Block v. Cross, 36 Miss. 549 (mere declaration of a trustee, who was a member of a mercantile firm, that his cestui que trust, a married woman, owed the firm nothing, by reason of his having collected of her assets a sufficiency to pay the debt, will not establish a payment of the debt, in the absence of all evidence, showing an appropriation of such assets to the use of the firm).

[a] Possession of funds of debtor.—Where plaintiff admits having money in his hands belonging to defendant, but fails to disclose how much, it will be presumed that he has sufficient to liquidate a balance due by defendant to him. Pulver v. Esselstyn, 22 Misc. 429, 50 NYS 756.

[a] Conflicting statements.—Testimony of a mortgagee, suing to foreclose, that the debt for which the mortgage was given existed at the execution of the latter, corroborated by testimony of an attorney who has been authorized to collect the debt, is not overcome by evidence of statements made by the mortgagee prior to taking the mortgage that the debt was paid, and that he and the debtor were "square." [a] When not conclusive, although uncontradicted.—But testimony of defendant, although uncontradicted as to payment, is not conclusive on the jury, where, on trial, neither the absence of the receipt for such payment nor the check on which the money to make the payment was claimed to have been procured was satisfactorily accounted for, and defendant admitted that the date of the payment as sworn to in his answer was false. Newcombe v. Hyman, 16 Misc. 25, 37 NYS 649.

63. Freeman v. Benedict, 37 Conn. 559.

64. Loyd Mercantile Co. v. Long, 123 La. 777, 49 S 521.

[a] The character, temperament, and habits of two litigants and the surrounding circumstances may make it more probable that one has forgotten the debt due him by the other than that the other should have paid it and have preserved no record showing is conclusive on the question of payment.[65]

[§ 264] 4. Remittance by Mail. Evidence that a remittance was "mailed," in different jurisdictions, may,[66] or may not,[67] be sufficient to show that it was received by the person to whom it was addressed. In any event such evidence, when taken in connection with other circumstances, may be sufficient to show receipt of the remittance.[68] The mailing of a remittance is not evidence that it was received on that day.[69] Where a letter containing a remittance was improperly addressed, the evidence is insufficient to show that the remittance was received by the creditor.[70]

[§ 265] 5. Possession of Evidence of Debt. Possession of the evidence of the debt by the creditor is some evidence that the debt has not been discharged by payment,[71] and on the other hand, possession of the evidence of the debt by the debtor is evidence that it has been paid;[72] but possession in the former case,[73] as well as in the latter,[74] may be explained.

[§ 266] 6. Payment by Bill, Note, or Check. The evidence to show that a bill, note, order, or check was or was not accepted as absolute payment according to whether payment in such a case is or is not presumed[75] must be clear and convincing,[76] but such fact may be established by competent, direct, or circumstantial evidence.[77] Entries on the cred-

[a] Thus, where, in an action brought by an administrator, it appears that his intestate and defendant gave their joint notes, and that the notes were found among his intestate's papers after his death, the possession of the notes by the intestate is prima facie evidence that he paid the whole of them. Va.—Morriss v. Harveys, 75 Va. 726.

[a] Debt secured by lien.—The fact that the indebtedness for which a bill was given was secured by a lien is a strong circumstance to show that it was not the intention of the creditor to receive the bill as payment. Cutting v. Whittemore, 72 N. H. 107, 54 A 1098; Wheeler v. Schroeder, 4 R. I. 383; Sweet v. James, 2 R. I. 270; Hopkins v. Detwiler, 25 W. Va. 734.

[b] Giving up or retention of security.—(1) In the absence of proof of a special agreement, the giving up or retention of the original security will in general be a decisive circumstance in determining the intention of the parties as to whether a bill, note, or check was accepted as an absolute payment. Kirkpatrick v. Puryear, 93 Tenn. 409, 24 SW 1130, 22 LRA 785; Fidelity Ins., etc., Co. v. Shenandoah Valley R. Co., 86 Va. 1, 9 SE 759, 19 AmSR 858; Morriss v. Harveys, 75 Va. 726. (3) Agreement to accept check as absolute payment is not implied from surrender of evidences of debt or giving of receipt. Cleve v. Craven Chemical Co., 18 F. (2d) 711, 52 ALR 980.

[c] The indorsement of a draft by the debtor of itself shows that the creditor did not take it at his own risk as payment. Darnall v. Morehouse, 36 HowPr 511 [rev on other grounds 45 N. Y. 64].

itor's books showing payment of the debts are not conclusive of the question whether a note of the debtor,[78] or of a third person, constitutes payment of the debt.[79] When checks are shown to have been paid, transfer of their sum to the payee is proved.[80]

[§ 267] G. Trial*[81]—1. In General. The trial of an issue of payment is governed by the usual rules relative to the trial of civil actions generally, so far as applicable thereto.[82]

[§ 268] 2. Reception and Exclusion of Evidence. In accordance with the rules relating to the order of proof in the trial of civil actions generally,[83] evidence of nonpayment should be withheld, unless it is a necessary part of a cause of action, until evidence of payment is introduced,[84] and then adduced in rebuttal.[85] As in other civil actions,[86] evidence as to payment which is insufficient as a matter of law may be stricken out on proper motion.[87]

[§ 269] 3. Questions for Court and Jury[88]—a. In General. In accordance with the general rules relating to the respective provinces of court and jury in the trial of civil actions,[89] the question of payment is ordinarily one of fact,[90] and therefore is for the jury;[91] and questions as to the genuineness of a receipt,[92] whether the payment evidenced by it was in fact made,[93] and whether it represents a full or only a partial payment,[94] are likewise for the jury on conflicting evidence. But the legal effect of acts done, as to whether or not a payment is thereby effectuated, is a question of law for the [d] In "lieu of cash."—In testimony that note was received in lieu of cash, phrase "in lieu of" is equivalent to "instead of," and does not imply that taking of note extinguished debt. Holt Mfg. Co. v. Brotherton, 91 Wash. 354, 157 P 849.

[e] Mere statement of parties.—A check not being payment unless received as such or cashed, a mere statement of one that he made a payment by a check drawn by him, without production thereof or of the books of the bank, does not prove payment. Tschopick v. Lippincott, (Tenn. Ch. A.) 48 SW 128.

[f] The mere fact that the debtor has failed to indorse the note which is claimed to constitute an absolute payment is not a controlling circumstance. Freeman v. Benedict, 37 Conn. 559.

[g] Recital of payment in full in check is subject to explanation. Southern Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 214 Ala. 373, 108 S 5.

[h] Construction of evidence.—Where the debtor requested the creditor not to present a check immediately, as the drawer's account was not good, testimony of the creditor that he took it in payment must be construed to mean as conditional payment. [a] Check made payable to one, "or bearer," and not indorsed by the payee, in absence of a showing that the named payee had been in possession of the check, is no evidence against such payee in an action to charge him with the check or its proceeds. Crockett v. Ohio Valley Banking, etc., Co., 174 Ky. 409, 192 SW 487.

[b] Where a check has been destroyed and is not in evidence, the fact that the check named a particular person as payee, and was returned to the drawer after payment, is not evidence that the person named in the check received the money thereon, in the absence of evidence that the indorsement of the check was in the handwriting of such payee. [a] Payment or purchase (1) of a note is generally a question for the jury. Dougherty v. Deeney, 45 Iowa 443. (2) Purchase of debt distinguished from payment see supra § 2.

[b] Whether debtor's check was paid by drawee (1) is a question for the jury when the evidence is conflicting. Dewey v. Margolis, 195 N. C. 307, 142 SE 22. (2) Payment or honor of check by drawee as effectuating payment of debt for which check was given see supra § 50.

[c] Payment to third person to whom creditor was indebted.—(1) Whether a debtor's payment, at his creditor's request, of a debt due from the creditor to a third person, was intended as an extinguishment pro tanto of the creditor's claim, is for the jury. Norment v. Brown, 79 N. C. 363. (2) Payment to one to whom creditor is indebted as discharge of creditor's claim see supra § 5.

[d] Sufficiency of evidence to raise jury question.—(1) To raise the issue of payment for the jury, a prima facie showing of payment is required. Hali Music Co. v. Robinson, (Tex. Civ. A.) 7 SW (2d) 625. (2) Testimony of plaintiff that defendant still owed him a specified amount, although in a sense a testimonial conclusion, is sufficient, when in conflict with evidence of defendant, to require the submission of the issue to the jury. Price v. Hendricks, 207 Ala. 267, 92 S 431. (3) Defendant's statement that he had paid the items in controversy is sufficient to carry the issue to the jury. Dorroh v. Wall, (Mo. A.) 297 SW 705. (4) Positive testimony by defendant that he had paid the debt for which recovery was sought warranted submission of the issue of payment to the jury, even though there was apparent conflict between his testimony on direct and cross examination. McCord v. Bridges, 209 Ala. 529, 96 S 432. (5) Where there is evidence that certain goods were delivered in payment of a note, although defendant's agent who delivered the goods testified that he sold them to plaintiff, the question of payment should have been left to the jury. [a] Receipt given under mistake of fact.—Where there is evidence on the part of the creditor that payments or collections shown by a receipt were not in fact made and that the receipt was given under a mistake of fact, the question is for the jury. Penney v. Grant, 16 Ala. A. 510, 79 S 271.

court;[95] and when a receipt is unquestioned it is for the court to determine its meaning and effect.[96]

[§ 270] b. Particular Matters—(1) Presumption of Payment.[97] The question whether a payment is to be presumed is ordinarily one of fact for the jury.[98]

Rebuttal of presumption.[99] Whether the evidence to rebut a presumption of payment is true is a question for the jury;[1] but whether the facts and circumstances relied on, if true, are sufficient to give rise to a presumption of nonpayment or rebut the presumption of payment is a question of law for the court.[2] So, when the evidence is uncontradicted,[3] and there is no question of credibility of the witness,[4] it is the duty of the court to pass upon its sufficiency and not to submit the issue to the jury; and if the debtor himself proves such facts as repel the presumption,[5] he cannot demand that the issue be submitted to the jury.[6]

[§ 271] (2) Manner, Form, and Medium of Payment[7]—(a) In General. The questions whether a remittance by mail is the usual mode, when a creditor in general terms directs his debtor to remit money to him, without prescribing the mode,[8] and whether payments by the debtor to a third person were made with the creditor's consent or agreement that the debt should be thereby discharged pro tanto,[9] are questions of fact for the jury. What is lawful money is a question of law for the court;[10] but it is a question for the jury to determine, when the matter is in dispute, in what medium a debt or obligation is to be paid or discharged,[11] as whether or not a contract or bond made during the Civil War calling for the payment of dollars contemplated Confederate dollars.[12]

[§ 272] (b) Payment Other than in Money.[13] Whether or not there was an agreement or consent on the part of the creditor to receive payment in some other medium than money,[14] as in goods and chattels[15] or real estate,[16] or a certificate of deposit,[17] is a question of fact; and so it is for the jury to determine whether a bill[18] or note,[19] includ-

"The payment of a debt, or the settlement of an account, is never to be presumed, except in accordance with the rational probabilities of the case. It is, therefore, but just and reasonable it should be judged of by the triers of the fact." Kimball v. Ives, supra.

[a] Presumption from lapse of time distinguished from bar of statute of limitations.—"There is a manifest distinction between those cases where length of time operates as a bar to the action, and those in which it can be used only as matter of evidence. In a case coming within the statute of limitations, the lapse of time prescribed by the statute is pleadable as a bar to the action, and the jury would be concluded by it, although they were convinced that the debt still remained due and unpaid. But where length of time is not per se a bar, but used merely as evidence, it is a matter for the consideration of the jury to credit it or not, and to draw their inference the one way or the other, according to circumstances." Holliday, 1 Watts (Pa.) 507 (holding that, where there is some circumstance offered in evidence to account for a delay or lapse of time which might otherwise raise a presumption of payment, it is the duty of the court to refer it to the jury, as an open question of fact, to determine as to actual payment); McLean v. Findley, 2 Penr. & W. ing that of a third person,[20] or a check,[21] or an order on a third person,[22] delivered to the creditor, was received as payment or only as conditional payment or additional security,[23] and whether a delay by the creditor in refusing to accept such paper as payment or in returning it was unreasonable, so that he must be deemed to have accepted it as such.[24]

[§ 273] (3) Effect of Payment.[25] Whether an inference of an admission of continued indebtedness may be drawn from a part payment is a question of fact for the jury.[26]

[§ 274] (4) Application of Payment.[27] In general, the intention of the parties as to which of two or more debts a payment is to be applied upon, or, when only one debt is shown, whether the payment was to be applied thereon, is a question of fact for the jury;[28] and so where the creditor has applied a payment otherwise than as directed by the debtor, it is for the jury to determine whether the debtor acquiesced in such application;[29] but if there is no conflict in the evidence, the question is one for the court.[30] Where neither party has applied the payment or manifested any intention as to how it should be applied, its application is a question of law for the court.[31]

Whether a debt was due at the time of a payment, so that the creditor could at his option apply the payment thereon,[32] is a question of fact for the jury.[33]

generally,[35] as where there is no material conflict in the evidence tending to show payment or nonpayment,[36] or the evidence is insufficient to justify submission of the issue to the jury,[37] or where a presumption of payment arises from lapse of time and the evidence is such that a contrary verdict would be set aside;[38] but uncontradicted evidence of payment of the principal of a debt does not entitle the debtor to a general peremptory instruction in his favor where payment of interest which was due is not shown.[39]

[§ 276] 5. Instructions—a. In General. The rules relating to instructions in civil actions in general govern the necessity and propriety of instructions as to payment.[40] Thus, where payment is pleaded and evidence to support it is introduced, the court must call the jury's attention to the defense;[41] and the instructions must be applicable to the issues,[42] and must not be misleading, even though, abstractly considered, they state correct propositions of law,[43] and must not invade the province of the jury,[44] nor assume as facts matters not proved,[45] nor give undue prominence to a slight and inconclusive circumstance.[46] Where payment is neither pleaded nor proved, no instruction relating thereto should be given.[47]

[§ 277] b. Particular Matters. Payment being required to be proved by a preponderance of the evidence,[48] an instruction which permits the jury to speculate upon the probabilities as to whether it has been made or not is erroneous.[49] An instruction that if the jury believe that the creditor has been fully paid he cannot recover has been held, however, not so general as to be objectionable.[50]

Burden of proof.[51] Where payment is in issue, the court may properly instruct the jury that the burden is on the one pleading payment to prove it,[52] except where there is a presumption of payment,[53] in which case such instruction should not be given;[54] but where it is contended that payment was made by a third person who assumed the debt, an instruction that the debtor has the burden of providing a discharge both of himself and of such third person is erroneous.[55] Where inconsistent instructions on the burden of proof are given, the judgment must be reversed, it being impossible to determine which instruction the jury followed.[56]

Presumptions.[57] Where the jury are instructed relative to the presumption of payment arising from lapse of time,[58] and facts tending to account for the interval or delay or showing an admission of nonpayment are in evidence, the jury should also be instructed to consider such facts as tending to rebut the presumption.[59] In a case in which the character of the debtor's possession of an obligation is in controversy, as to whether it is rightful or fraudulent, it is error to instruct that possession of an obligation is presumptive evidence of payment.[60] Where the nonproduction of an obligation is not the sole fact in evidence bearing on the question of payment, there is no occasion to charge on any presumption that would or would not arise from that fact alone.[61]

Medium of payment.[62] When an obligation is payable in Confederate currency, it is error not to charge the jury on the provisions of a scaling act fixing the rate of payment in federal money.[63] An instruction upon payment in a medium other than money which leaves out of consideration the necessity of consent or agreement to receive such medium in payment is erroneous.[64] There is no error in refusing to instruct that a debt is discharged if the creditor accepted a specified medium under the agreement that it should constitute payment, where there is no evidence on which to found such an instruction.[65]

Application of payment.[66] Where the application of a payment is a question of fact, the court should instruct the jury to take into consideration all the evidence in determining the intention of the parties,[67] and should direct how the payment should be applied on the state of facts found by the jury to exist;[68] and it is ordinarily proper to state the general rule that the oldest item of an account will be first paid.[69] Where there is conflicting evidence as to whether a payment was directed or agreed to be applied to a particular debt or obligation, it is error to instruct the jury how to apply it without first requiring them to find whether any direction or agreement as to its application was made;[70] and the court should not charge that the money received by the creditor became his property, since the jury might believe therefrom that he was not bound to apply it as directed or agreed.[71] An instruction that the creditor cannot recover on a debt upon which the debtor had expressly directed a payment to be applied is erroneous where there is evidence showing that the debtor had theretofore acquiesced in its application to other debts.[72] The court is authorized to give instructions relating to the creditor's right to apply a payment on other debts or obligations than the one in suit where the evidence shows their existence.[73]

Receipts.[74] Where a receipt or receipted bill is in evidence, it is the duty of the court to give specific instructions as to its legal effect in discharging the burden of proof.[75] An instruction that a receipt is evidence of the highest and most satisfactory character is not justified, in view of the rebuttability of the receipt;[76] and an instruction that a receipt is conclusive in the absence of a showing of misrepresentation, fraud, or mistake is too narrow.[77] It is not error to refuse to instruct that a receipt will stand where the evidence is equally balanced, since the instruction does not exclude the receipt in comparing the weight of the evidence on one side with that on the other.[78]

Definition of words or phrases used.[79] An instruction as to the necessity of returning the bills of a suspended bank given in payment,[80] which fails to define "a reasonable time" is erroneous.[81]

Curing error by further instructions. An erroneous instruction that a receipt of payment of accounts is prima facie evidence of payment of notes is not cured by a subsequent instruction that the burden of proving payment of the notes is on the creditor,[82] since according to the first instruction he had done that by producing the receipt.[83] But if, when the instructions given are considered as a whole, no error appears, the inaccuracy or incompleteness of one of them is not ground for objection.[84]

[§ 278] 6. Verdict and Findings. A verdict of a jury, or findings by the court or a referee, upon an issue of payment, is governed by the rules relating to verdicts and findings in civil actions generally.[85]

Verdict. The determination by the jury of an issue of payment may ordinarily be expressed by a general verdict for the creditor for the amount found due after deducting all payments admitted or proved.[86] Where the evidence as to payment is conflicting, the general rule as to the conclusiveness of a verdict based on conflicting evidence is applicable.[87]

Findings. In accordance with the general rules relating to findings of fact,[88] a finding that payment has not been made in full leaves open the question whether it has been made in part.[89] A finding that notes were given "in compromise, settlement and cancellation" of a debt amounts to a finding that they were given and received in payment;[90] but a finding merely that the creditor received a bill or note for the amount of his debt,[91] or that he accepted a note as evidence of the debt,[92] is not equivalent to a finding that it was accepted in payment. The application of a payment according to the agreement of the parties is not established by a finding that it was applied in accordance with such agreement "and the state of the accounts."[93]

[§ 279] H. Judgment, New Trial, and Review. The rules governing the judgment,[94] new trial,[95] and review on appeal[96] of civil actions generally are applicable to actions in which payment is in issue.[97] Thus a new trial cannot be had by a debtor on account of the creditor's failure to produce a note given for the amount of the debt,[98] where no objection to the nonproduction was made at the trial;[99] and the grant or refusal of a new trial on a ground within the court's discretion will not be reviewed of all the facts, and without any fraud, duress, or extortion, although no obligation to make such payment existed. In accordance with the general rule, if a person voluntarily pays what the law will not compel him to pay, but which in equity and good conscience he ought to pay, he cannot recover it back,[8] although the parties differ as to its application;[9] and on the other hand it has been held that action to recover money paid voluntarily will lie only where equity and good conscience require the return of the money.[10]

From third person. But the fact that a payment was voluntarily made does not prevent its recovery from a third person whose breach of contract made it necessary to make the payment to the payee.[11]

[§ 281] 2. What Constitutes Voluntary Payment in General. A voluntary payment, within the meaning of the rule that such a payment cannot be recovered,[12] means a payment made by a person of his own motion, without compulsion;[13] a payment made without a mistake of fact[14] or fraud,[15] duress, coercion, or extortion,[16] on a demand which is not enforceable against the payor,[17] instead of invoking any remedy or defense which the law affords against such demand;[18] and whether in a given case a payment is voluntary depends on the facts of the particular case, as indicating an intention on the part of the payor to waive his legal rights.[19] A voluntary payment implies a legitimate cause;[20] and, in the absence of compulsion, it includes a payment

[a] "The reason of the rule is obvious. If a claim is to be litigated at all, it ought to be litigated promptly. By delay, the recollection of witnesses is liable to become indistinct, and documentary evidence is liable to become lost or destroyed, and witnesses are liable to die. And on many accounts, it may be important to the claimant to have the validity of his claim determined promptly and without delay; and if the other party should be allowed to pay a claim first and then litigate it afterwards, it would give him the power to select his own time for the litigation; and, by delaying it, to place his adversary at a great disadvantage." made on an illegal claim or demand with knowledge of its illegality or groundlessness;[21] and also includes a payment made on a moral obligation,[22] or on a natural obligation, that is, one which, although invalid for want of form or some reason of general policy, is not in itself immoral or unjust.[23]

Essential elements. It is essential to a voluntary payment that the payor must have had the freedom of exercising his will,[24] and must have acted with a full knowledge of all the material facts,[25] although he may have been in ignorance of his legal rights.[26]

Payments not voluntary or not included. A payment is not voluntary if it is made under any species of compulsion;[27] and a voluntary payment does not include the mere indorsement of a draft on delivery,[28] or an overpayment on a running account.[29] The retention by a debtor of part of a debt due a creditor, although made with the knowledge of the creditor, is in no sense a voluntary payment of the amount retained,[30] especially where this is done contrary to the wishes of the alleged debtor and it is found that nothing is due from him.[31] A denial of a right of set-off in favor of the debtor is not a voluntary payment by the debtor to the creditor of the amount of such set-off, so as to preclude the debtor's subsequent recovery thereon.[32]

[§ 282] 3. Applications of Rules to Particular Payments in General. The general rule that a voluntary payment cannot be recovered back[33] has been held to apply to voluntary payments by a corporation,[34] or by an officer thereof;[35] to a payment to an agent for the payee, which could not have been recovered back if it had been paid to the payee directly;[36] to a voluntary payment for services rendered,[37] or for an option;[38] to tips paid over by an employee to his employer, and not claimed until after the employment is terminated;[39] and to the repayment, by one indicted for larceny, of the sum alleged to have been stolen, although he is afterward tried and acquitted.[40] A bankrupt, although discharged, cannot recover back payments voluntarily made by him on his indebtedness,[41] but this does not prevent him from recovering payments made, without his authority, by the custodian of his funds[42]

Claim or color of right. Money voluntarily paid on a claim of right with knowledge of the facts by the payor cannot be recovered on the ground that the claim was invalid or unenforceable,[43] although the payor protests at the time against his liability.[44]

[§ 283] 4. Payment between Parties to Fiduciary Relation. An exception to the general rule exists where a fiduciary relation exists between the payee and the payor.[45] A payment to the agent of the payor to be paid over to a third person is not a voluntary payment so as to preclude the payor from recovering the money from his agent before he has paid it over to such third person.[46]

[§ 284] 5. Payment of Debt of Third Person.[47] If a person, with full knowledge of the facts, voluntarily pays the debt of a third person, he cannot recover back the amount so paid;[48] and in the absence of ratification he cannot recover such payment from the debtor.[49]

[§ 285] 6. Money Paid on Contract in General.[50] Where a person has acted with full knowledge of all the material facts, he cannot recover money which he had voluntarily paid under a contract,[51] and this rule applies, even though the contract is an illegal one, if the contract is executed and the parties are in pari delicto.[52] A recovery, however, as for money had and received may be had of money paid on a contract, the consideration for which has wholly failed,[53] or where the contract is one which plaintiff has rescinded or has a right to rescind.[54]

[§ 286] 7. Payments by or to Public Corporations.[55] The rule that voluntary payments cannot payment of a note executed by plaintiff to defendant's intestate before the bankruptcy proceedings, is not a voluntary payment precluding recovery. Horowitz v. Cohen, 172 App. Div. 700, 159 NYS 325.

55. Recovery of payments made:

be recovered back[56] applies to payments by a private individual or corporation to the United States, state, county, town, city, or other public corporation, or to an officer thereof as such.[57] On the other hand, while the rule has been applied to payments by public officers as such,[58] the general rule is that, where a wrongful payment is made by the agent or officer of a public corporation, without authority therefor, it is not a voluntary payment by the corporation and may be recovered back by it,[59] and accordingly if a public officer pays out public funds in satisfaction of the debts of another, the debtor will be bound to reimburse the public corporation.[60]

[§ 287] 8. Payment to Officer of Court.[61] The general rule[62] does not apply to, but recovery may be had of, payments made to an officer of the court under a misapprehension as to legal rights,[63] or under protest against arbitrary action on the part of such officer,[64] except to the extent that the money has been paid out in good faith under the direction of the court.[65]

[§ 288] 9. Payment of Interest.[66] Where a party voluntarily and without mistake of fact pays interest in excess of what is legally due, it is governed by the rule applicable to any other voluntary payment and cannot be recovered back,[67] except that in some jurisdictions where the payment is of usurious interest it may be recovered back.[68] In accordance with this rule one who makes a voluntary payment of interest is not entitled to have the excess over the amount actually due applied on the principal, since to do so would be equivalent to holding that it could be recovered back.[69] It has been held that the payment by a customer to his broker of interest in excess of the agreed rate in order to procure the return of his collateral is not a voluntary payment, so as to preclude its recovery.[70]

Compound interest voluntarily paid cannot be recovered back,[71] as where it has been paid under an agreement to pay compound interest, which has been executed.[72]

[§ 289] 10. Payment by Way of Compromise.[73] Money paid, with full knowledge of the facts, on a fair and deliberate compromise between parties standing on equal terms cannot be recovered back;[74] and this rule applies, although the payor was mistaken as to a fact material to his liability, if the mistake was not mutual.[75]

[§ 290] 11. Payments Not Indorsed or Applied. Where a debtor pays money to his creditor to be indorsed and applied on the demand in suit, but suffers the creditor to take judgment for the whole amount, he cannot recover the money back.[76] But if, after the creditor thus neglects to indorse or apply it, he has the means of collecting the whole debt without giving the debtor any day in court, and does so collect it, the debtor may recover back the money which has thus been paid and not applied.[77]

[§ 291] 12. Payment on Judgment or Decree. It is a well settled general rule that, where a judgment or decree has been recovered before a competent court, even though it is erroneous or illegal, any payment that is voluntarily made thereon, with a full knowledge of the facts, cannot be recovered back, while the judgment or decree remains in force,[78] and it is immaterial that the recovery was fraudulent,[79] unless the payment itself was procured

[a] Illustrations.—(1) Where a judgment debtor, with knowledge of a mistake made by the referee before whom the action was tried, whereby the amount of the recovery was increased, pays the judgment without protest, or any claim in any way of the existence of the mistake, the payment is substantially a voluntary payment after knowledge of the facts, and cannot be recovered back, although the judgment creditor had knowledge of the mistake at the time of the payment and failed to make disclosure thereof. Wood v. Amory, 105 N. Y. 278, 11 NE 636. (2) Payment on a default judgment in consideration of the withdrawal of execution and opening default is not recoverable after a subsequent dismissal of the action in the absence of a provision therefor in the agreement. Burns v. MacDonalds Cons. Ltd., (Sask.) [1925] 3 DomLR 418.

[b] No execution.—Payment of a judgment on which no execution has been issued by which its collection can be enforced is voluntary and not compulsory. Elston v. Chicago, 40 Ill. 514, 89 AmD 361.

[c] Loss of receipt.—Assumpsit does not lie to recover back money claimed as having been erroneously recovered by defendant, in a judgment against plaintiff, in consequence of plaintiff's not being able to produce a receipt, which was afterward found. James v. Cavit, 4 S. C. L. 174.

[d] Effect of assignment.—Where a creditor assigns his claim to a third person to secure a lesser debt without the consent of the debtor, and recovers judgment for the amount of the claim less the secured debt, but subsequently levies execution for the full amount of the claim which is paid by the debtor under protest, the debtor cannot recover such payment, as the partial assignment is good as against the debtor and assignor and the payment to the assignor will be treated as being made for the benefit of the assignee, although made under a void execution. West v. Brown, 165 Ga. 187, 140 SE 500.

[a] In Kentucky, however, where a judgment has been procured by fraud and payment thereof has been through fraud.[89] The payment of a judgment is voluntarily within the meaning of this rule, unless it is made to procure the release of the person or goods of the party making the payment after seizure, or to prevent their seizure by an officer armed with the authority or apparent authority to seize them.[81]

Payment on execution. If the payment on the judgment is otherwise voluntary, the fact that it is made under the compulsion of an execution does not authorize its recovery;[82] and this rule applies, although the execution is irregular, but not void.[83] But where a judgment is irregularly entered, money collected by an execution thereon may be recovered.[84]

Effect of reversal. If the judgment or decree is afterward reversed or vacated, money paid thereon can be recovered back.[85]

[§ 292] 13. Agreement To Repay; Reservation of Rights. Of course if there is an agreement to repay on a certain condition, a recovery back is authorized after the happening of such condition.[86] Such recovery, however, can be had only upon the condition agreed on.[87] A payment made to avoid delay on the condition that the difference as to the amount due shall be adjusted later is not a voluntary payment, and may be recovered as money received.[88]

Subsequent promise. Where there is a moral obligation to refund the money, it may be recovered on a subsequent promise to do so.[89]

Reservation of rights. A payment made with the express reservation of the right to recover the same by suit authorizes a recovery thereof.[90]

[§ 293] B. Compulsory Payments[91]—1. Recoverability in General. As contradistinguished from voluntary payments,[92] it is equally well settled that payments coerced under duress or unlawful compulsion may be recovered back,[93] that is, money which has been paid through duress, extortion, or oppression, or where undue and unconscionable advantage has been taken of a situation or of the pressing necessity of a person, by means whereof payment has been coerced, and which the payee ought not to retain, may be recovered back;[94] and it has been coerced from the debtor by execution, the amount may be recovered in equity without the necessity of first vacating or setting aside such judgment. Ellis v. Kelly, 8 Bush 621; West v. Kerby, 4 J. J. Marsh. 56.

[a] Payment held not voluntary.—Where a judgment debtor, who had obtained a discharge in bankruptcy releasing him from liability on the judgment, delivered to an officer threatening to levy on the entire business of the debtor to satisfy the judgment a check, on the understanding that it should be deposited with the clerk of the court to be returned to the debtor on his establishing his claim that the liability was discharged, the delivery of the check was not a voluntary payment, and the debtor could recover the check. Finnell v. Armoura, 39 Utah 316, 117 P 49.

[b] In Pennsylvania it has been held that, where defendant in a judgment, desiring to be relieved of a lien on a portion of his real estate, pays a judgment and secures thereby a release of his lien, his payment is voluntary and he cannot thereafter recover the amount of it, although the judgment is subsequently stricken off as having been illegal; since in such a case payment by defendant is not the only means available to effect the lien, inasmuch as he might proceed before such payment to have the judgment stricken off. held immaterial that the payment was made with full knowledge of all the facts.[95] But in order to recover moneys paid under duress, it must be shown not only that there was duress,[96] but also that the demand or duress was illegal, unjust, or oppressive,[97] and that it is against equity and good conscience for the payee to retain the money;[98] and in accordance with this rule, if any sum was due from the payor, he may recover only the excess which was wrongfully and unlawfully procured from him.[99]

Estoppel. If, after making a compulsory payment, the payor voluntarily makes further payments or in any way affirms its validity, he precludes himself from then avoiding it.[1]

Duress per minas is a personal matter, and one person ordinarily cannot recover money paid by reason of duress to another,[2] but there are exceptions to this rule based on nearness of family relations.[3]

[§ 294] 2. What Constitutes Compulsion[4]—a. In General. Originally, at common law, "duress" meant only duress of the person, and nothing short of such duress, amounting to a reasonable apprehension of imminent danger to life, limb, or liberty, was sufficient to enable the party to recover back money paid.[5] Subsequently, however, the courts of law, in analogy to the rules of the courts of equity as to setting aside contracts for duress,[6] gradually extended the doctrine so as to recognize duress of property as a sort of moral duress which might, equally with duress of the person, entitle a party to recover back money paid under its influence;[7] and in accordance with this view the rule was thereafter laid down that payment is not made under duress, and hence is not recoverable unless made to release the person or property of the payor from detention, or to prevent a seizure of either by one having apparent authority to seize without resorting to an action.[8]

The modern authorities go even further and generally declare that the duress may be exercised by threats as well as force,[9] and that, irrespective of the manifestation or apprehension of physical force, such pressure or constraint as compels a man to go against his will, virtually takes away his free agency, and destroys the power of refusing to comply with the unlawful demand of another, constitutes duress.[10] In other words, there must be some actual or threatened exercise of power, possessed or believed to be possessed by the party exacting or receiving the payment, over the person or property of the person making the payment, from which the latter has no other means of immediate relief than by submitting to the unreasonable or unjust demand and making the payment.[11]

Dependent on facts. Under these rules "duress" as a ground for the recovery of money paid is a relative, rather than a positive, term,[12] and no definite and exact rule of universal application can be laid down by which to determine whether a payment is voluntary or involuntary,[13] but from the very nature of the subject, each case must depend somewhat upon its own peculiar facts and circumstances[14] and may often be a question of difficulty.[15] The real and ultimate fact to be determined in every case is whether or not the party paying really had a choice, that is, whether he had his freedom of exercising his will,[16] and where there is a necessity

"The cases in which the question has most frequently arisen, are where the liberty of the person or the possession of his property has been involved, and in such cases it is perfectly proper to say (as it has been said, without intending to imply that the law will recognize no other sort of coercion or compulsion), that to make the payment of an illegal demand involuntary, it must be made to appear that it was made to release the person or property of the party from detention, or to prevent a seizure of either by the other party, having apparent authority to do so, without resorting to an action of law. This statement of the law is accurate enough when applied to the facts of the cases in which it has been made, but it is not a full statement of the law." Hazleton v. McGroarty, 2 Pa. Dist. 288, 290.

[a] Reason for rule.—"The modern rule with reference to payments made under duress . . . has resulted from the efforts of courts to avoid a multiplicity of suits and to administer law and equity by the same tribunal and in the same action, and it will be seen from a consideration of the authorities that it is a blending of both the legal and equitable remedies in one action." Wilbur v. Blanchard, 22 Ida. 517, 528, 126 P 1069.

[b] It is sufficient, if the constraint in the particular instance destroys free agency, whether relief was formerly obtainable by common-law action for duress or by suit in equity for wrongful compulsion. Manhattan Milling Co. v. Manhattan Gas, etc., Co., 115 Kan. 712, 225 P 86.

"Acts which might fall far short of duress under certain conditions might be ample under other conditions. The threat of an enraged boy to commence a criminal prosecution might be unworthy of notice; the same threat by a man of experience in the world might well cause anxiety; while the same threat by the state's official prosecutor could hardly fail to cause deep solicitude if not actual terror. It is apparent also that a threat which would have no serious effect on a strong, experienced business man would be terrifying in the extreme to a nervous or weak person with little or no experience in the world. There are no arbitrary and unbending rules which can be applied in every case to determine the question." Coon v. Metzler, supra.

"There is no legal standard of resistance which a party so circumstanced must exercise at his peril of acting at once, less may be considered to amount to such compulsion than in other cases.[17]

Nature of compulsion. The compulsion, however, need not be an actual, or complete, or irresistible compulsion;[18] and although there must be something more than a mere threat and peril of pecuniary loss,[19] the compulsion need not amount to the duress necessary to the avoidance of a contract,[20] but may consist of a virtual or moral duress,[21] or of any species of compulsion.[22]

Applications of rules. A recovery may be allowed where the payment of an unlawful demand has been obtained by taking an undue advantage of the situation of the payor,[23] or under an enforced satisfaction of a judgment;[24] or where it has been made to avoid proceedings to enforce a penalty,[25] or to prevent an injury to one's property rights;[26] or where it is illegally demanded by one who is in a position to dictate terms under color of a statute or of an office;[27] or where it is paid on a wrongful demand to save the party paying from some great or irreparable mischief or damage, from which he could not otherwise be saved;[28] or where it is extorted through threats of exposure to public disgrace.[29]

[§ 295] b. Duress of Person in General.[30] The rule is well settled that, where one is compelled by duress of his person to pay an unjust or illegal demand, and he makes the payment under protest, such payment is compulsory and may be recovered back.[31] Thus a payment is compulsory and may be recovered back where it is made of an unjust or illegal demand to obtain release from imprisonment,[32] or from an arrest and threatened imprisonment by one having power to enforce his threat.[33] to protect himself. The question in each case is, Was the alleged injured person, by being put in fear by the other party to the transaction for the purpose of obtaining an advantage over him, deprived of the free exercise of his will power, and was such advantage thereby obtained? If the proposition be determined in the affirmative, no matter what the nature of the threatened injury to such person, or his property, or the person or liberty of his wife or child, the advantage thereby obtained cannot be retained. The idea is that what constitutes duress is wholly a matter of law and is simply the deprivation by one person of the will power of another by putting such other in fear for the purpose of obtaining, by that means, some valuable advantage of him. The means by which that condition of mind is produced are matters of fact, and whether such condition was in fact produced is usually wholly matter of fact, though of course the means may be so oppressive as to render the result an inference of law." "Where one man, in any capacity, avails himself of the possession of another's goods, to wring from that other an unlawful payment of money, as the condition, and the only one, upon which the goods will be re-

trol of the property, in pursuit of any legal remedy he may have, will be attended with serious loss or great inconvenience.[41] This coercion is generally embraced in the term "duress of goods;"[42] and to constitute such duress there must be a threat to do some act which the threatening party has no legal right to do, some illegal exaction, fraud, or deception, and restraint must be imminent and such as to destroy free agency without a present means of protection,[43] although it is immaterial that the acts claimed to constitute duress do not amount to technical duress.[44] The payment, however, is not under duress where the party asserting the claim or making the demand must resort to the courts to enforce it,[45] and where the payor has a complete and adequate remedy at law, which he could pursue instead of making the payment.[46] A payment made to obtain a release of goods, which by the terms of a mortgage the payor is prohibited from removing, is not a payment under duress.[47]

Payment by third person. Where goods are released on the promise of a third party to pay the charges against the same, and he pays such charges, the recovery of the money back by the party for whom the payment was made is not prevented if the third party is reimbursed.[48]

[§ 297] (b) Under Legal Process. As a general rule a payment of an unlawful or oppressive demand or claim may be recovered back, as being compulsory, where it is made in order to retain or obtain the possession of property seized or about to be seized under legal process,[49] as where the payment is made, after the issuance of an execution, to prevent a levy upon, or a sale of, the property,[50] or where it is made to procure the release of property wrongfully seized by an officer.[51] The mere fact, however, that claimant has resorted to legal process to enforce his claim does not entitle the payor to recover back a payment which he has in fact made voluntarily stored, such payment shall not be voluntary in the eye of the law." Alston v. Durant, 33 S. C. L. 257, 264, 49 AmD 596.

"When we speak of duress in this connection, it does not necessarily mean personal fear or the use of force, but rather that pressure of circumstances which compels the will of man to yield to an exaction or a payment to release his property from some illegal hold upon it." Adrico Realty Corp. v. New York, 250 N. Y. 29, 33, 164 NE 732.

with a full knowledge of the facts;[52] and it has been held that if the payment on a judgment is otherwise voluntary, it is not recoverable as being compulsory by reason of the fact that it is made under the compulsion of an execution,[53] or under a threat to levy execution.[54]

Attachment.[55] The fact that the payment is coerced by a threat to attach[56] or by an attachment[57] of goods does not render the payment compulsory; and this is equally true, although the attachment is issued in a state foreign to the residence of the payor.[58] Where, however, the attachment is threatened or sued out in bad faith by one with knowledge that he has no cause of action or who makes an excessive demand, for the purpose of extorting money from defendant, a payment to discharge the attachment is considered compulsory, and an action will lie for its recovery back.[59]

[§ 298] (2) Real Property. It has been stated that there cannot be such a thing as duress with respect to real property, so as to render a payment coerced thereby compulsory;[60] and it has been held that, where a person holding the title to land under an express or implied agreement to reconvey upon the payment of a particular sum refuses to convey unless an excessive sum is paid, payment to obtain the title is not compulsory.[61] By the weight of authority, however, a payment may be coerced by duress as to real property as well as to personal property, and, when so coerced, may be recovered back.[62] For example, a payment is compulsory and may be recovered back where it is made to remove or prevent a cloud upon the title of the payor;[63] or where a mortgagee in possession requires the mortgagor or his assignee to pay more than is legally due in order to redeem;[64] or where a party redeems from a

[b] Payment after return day.—If the money was voluntarily paid after the return day of the execution, and under no mistake by the party paying it as to his rights, he cannot recover it; but it does not follow that the payment was voluntary, merely because it was made after the return day of the execution, when there was a subsisting levy on the defendant's land; whether it was voluntary or not, under such circumstances, is a question for the determination of the jury Ewing v. [a] Mere attachment not sufficient.—The mere fact, there being no element of fraud or other means of oppression, that one is sued by attachment in the state where plaintiff resides, but which is foreign to the residence of defendant, will not of itself make the payment of money to avoid such a judgment compulsory in such a sense that it can be recovered back if it can be shown not to be due. [c] Payment to lift mechanic's lien.—While the filing of a mechanic's lien does not interfere with the possession of the land, yet where it effectually deprives the owner of the use of it for the purposes for which he needed it, payment to satisfy the lien founded on an unjust claim, in order to clear the title of record, is paid under duress of real property. foreclosure sale in order to protect his liens and titles.[65] So where a person entitled to redeem from a real estate mortgage pays, upon the demand of the mortgagee, and under protest, more interest than is due in order to prevent expiration of the time for redemption, he may recover such interest back.[66] And where a purchaser refuses to allow a redemption from a foreclosure sale, except upon payment of more than is due, the amount so paid in excess of what was actually due may be recovered back.[67]

[§ 299] d. Apprehension or Threat of Legal Proceedings—(1) Of Civil Proceedings in General. As a general rule, mere apprehension[68] or threats[69] of a civil proceeding to enforce a claim, unaccompanied by any act of hardship or oppression, does not render a payment in response thereto involuntary in the sense that it can be recovered back; and this rule also applies, although the payment is not made until after legal proceedings to recover on the asserted claim have actually been instituted in good faith.[70] But it has been held that, where civil proceedings are instituted on a fictitious claim for the legality, or if, made under a threatened sale of his property, and he can contest the validity of the proceedings whenever an attempt is made to disturb his possession, and he pays the claim or demand rather than be subjected to such action or to have his property sold, such payment is voluntary, to the extent that it cannot be recovered in an action therefor." "The coercion which results from a prosecution in court, in good faith, with full right of appeal, does not constitute legal duress." Blumenthal v. U. S., 4 F. (2d) 808, 809.

[a] Before final judgment.—"The payment of a claim, on account of being sued on it, at any stage before final judgment and execution, is regarded voluntary, and, if made with full knowledge of the facts, cannot be recovered back any more than if it had been made on demand, without suit." Wheatley v. Waldo, 36 Vt. 237, 243.

[b] Filing a mechanic's lien is not the commencement of judicial proceedings within the rule that the purpose of extortion, a payment coerced thereby is compulsory and may be recovered back.[71]

Foreclosure of mortgage.[72] Mere apprehension of foreclosure or threats by the mortgagee to foreclose a mortgage will not render compulsory a payment by the mortgagor of an excessive amount claimed by the mortgagee.[73]

[§ 300] (2) Of Criminal Prosecution in General. Where no warrant has been issued or proceedings begun, and there is no immediate danger, a payment with full knowledge of the facts will not, as a general rule, be deemed compulsory so as to entitle the payor to recover it back, by reason of the fact that the payment is made under a mere apprehension,[74] or threat[75] of a criminal prosecution. However, demands and threats of persons clothed with governmental authority to carry them into execution by arrest and prosecution stand on a different footing from demands and threats of private individuals, and money paid because thereof, if unwarranted, may generally be recovered back,[76] as in such cases the parties do not stand on an equal footing.[77]

[§ 301] (3) Of Arrest and Imprisonment.[78] A payment made under threat of arrest and imprisonment, provided the duress provokes fear sufficient to overcome the will of a man of ordinary firmness and constancy,[79] is considered compulsory, and may be recovered back;[80] and this rule is especially applicable where the payor, because of his age, intellect, or disposition, is particularly susceptible to

[c] In New York it has been held that, where a debtor, on being brought before a referee in supplementary proceedings, sought an adjournment to procure counsel, which was refused him until certain questions were asked by the creditor's attorney, whereupon he sought to pay the amount demanded under protest, which was not allowed, and he thereupon paid the amount and costs, such payment was pursuant to legal duress, and was therefore recoverable. [a] A payment to prevent the arrest of employees of the person making the payment has been held not a voluntary one. Chicago v. Waukesha Imperial Spring Brewing Co., 97 Ill. A. 583.

[b] Payment under unlawful ordinance.—Where a person might be arrested unless the payment exacted under an unlawful ordinance is made, and, if not arrested but proceeded against by summons, might be fined and imprisoned, if the fine is not paid, the payment is made under duress. Wash.—Bertschinger v. Campbell, 99 Wash. 142, 168 P 977, LRA1918C 65.

[a] The presumption of want of duress in the making of contracts does not apply to the payment of money under threat of imprisonment where not claimed under a shadow of right. Bertschinger v. Campbell, 99 Wash. 142, 168 P 977, LRA1918C 65.

[b] Defenses.—In an action to recover money paid to defendants under duress of threatened arrest, an answer alleging that one of the plaintiffs was personally liable under his contract of employment with defendant for the amount which he was required to pay because an express package was lost through his negligence constitutes no defense to the cause of action alleged in the petition. American R. Express Co. v. Hicks, 198 Ky. 549, 249 SW 342.

fear from such a threat.[81] Even though the person threatened is guilty of the crime charged, if an excessive or illegal payment is extorted from him under threats of arrest and imprisonment, such payment is compulsory and may be recovered.[82] So, also, a threat to arrest a child[83] or husband[84] of the payor makes the payment involuntary and recoverable, and it is of no consequence whether the threat is of a lawful or unlawful imprisonment.[85]

[§ 302] e. Business Necessities. Where, in an emergency which arises through no fault of his own,[86] a person is compelled, through the necessity of protecting his business interests, to pay an unlawful demand, the payment is compulsory and may be recovered back,[87] such as a payment made to avoid a great financial loss,[88] or under a business necessity to free property of some duress or lien.[89] In the absence, however, of a demand or some element of coercion or duress, a payment is not rendered compulsory by the mere fact that it is made in order to enable the payor to carry on his business.[90]

[a] Thus duress is established where it is proved that plaintiff, a man seventy-two years old and ignorant of the law, was threatened by defendant with prosecution, imprisonment, and fine for selling cider without a license, unless he would pay defendant one hundred and fifty dollars, and that plaintiff, on being confronted with several men who claimed that he had sold them cider, and on being informed by defendant that the men would so testify, under the influence of such threats paid the one hundred and fifty dollars without any consideration. [a] In other words, under such circumstances, it may be found as a fact that the party paying has not had his freedom of exercising his will and paid the money under moral duress, in which event, if it is against equity and good conscience for the money to be withheld from plaintiff, it may be recovered. Brown v. Worthington, 162 Mo. A. 508, 517, 142 SW 1082 [cit Cyc].

[b] Illustrations.—(1) When the alternative presented to a party is to submit to a city's exactions or discontinue his business within the corporate limits, money paid under such circumstances is not money paid voluntarily. Chicago v. Waukesha Imperial Spring Brewing Co., 97 Ill. A. 583. (2) Money paid to a collector of a port under protest, and on the certainty that if not paid clearance of vessels necessarily sailing on a definite schedule would be refused, to the great damage of the owner, is paid involuntarily, and can, if unlawfully exacted, be recovered. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, 214 U. S. 320, 29 SCt 671, 53 L. ed. 1013. (3) Where the county commissioners, while the law then in force authorized them, in granting a ferry license, to impose an annual tax, not exceeding one hundred dollars, gave notice that they would grant a ferry license to the person who would give the largest sum to the county as a donation, and, several offers being made, the person who had previously kept the ferry offered and paid five hundred dollars, such sum may be recovered back. La Salle County v. Simmons, 10 Ill. 513.

[c] Electrical service.—Where it is necessary to obtain electrical service in order to carry on a business and it is necessary that an excessive charge be paid to receive future service, such payments are involuntary. Home Coal Co. v. Macon, 216 Mo. A. 590, 262 SW 59.

[d] A payment made to an actor after the bills for the evening have been issued, under a threat of not performing, is not voluntary. Dana v. Kemble, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 545.

[e] A payment of tolls cannot be said to be voluntary and not compulsory, when made by the party to enable him to obtain a passage for the United States mail, which he is bound to carry, and to keep his property from being taken from him by distress. Newland v. Buncombe Turnp. Co., 26 N. C. 372.

[f] Deposit in escrow.—Where, to protect his business, plaintiff gave securities in escrow on demand of defendant from whom plaintiff's associate in business had embezzled and defendant realized thereon, plaintiff may recover the proceeds regardless of the validity of the escrow agreement, since duress was used preventing a voluntary payment. [a] Fees to railroad commission.—Where a railroad engaged in interstate commerce was required to obtain the permission of the railroad commission to issuance of securities and to pay the commission fees as provided for by statutes declaring issues of securities void unless authorized by the commission and imposing heavy penalties for noncompliance, and the railroad paid the fees under protest with notice that it would promptly take steps to recover back the money paid, the payment of the fees was under duress and not voluntary. Suspension from board of trade. Payment of an illegal demand growing out of a transaction on a board of trade made under apprehension of suspension, in default thereof, from the privileges of the board of trade, is not compulsory.[91]

[§ 303] f. Threat or Fear of Loss of Employment. A payment under a threat[92] or fear[93] of discharge from employment has been held not to have been made under duress.

[§ 304] g. Payment To Compel Performance of Contract in General.[94] As a general rule, a payment exacted as a condition to the performance of a contract cannot be considered compulsory.[95] Where, however, the nonperformance of the contract would have resulted in serious loss to the payor, and he had no other adequate remedy, the payment has been considered compulsory.[96]

[§ 305] h. Effect of Protest. In the absence of a statutory provision otherwise, a payment cannot be recovered back as being compulsory or involuntary by reason of the mere fact that it is paid unwillingly,[97] and that the payor at the time of payment makes a protest against the payment.[98] But where a receipt taken for the money paid expressly

Crenshaw, 64 Iowa 404, 20 NW 492. (2) Where plaintiff had secured a judgment in the state court foreclosing a mechanic's lien on a bankrupt's real estate, and filed such judgment as a claim against the bankrupt's estate, and the trustee in bankruptcy and the creditors all found it to the creditors' advantage to relieve the estate of the lien, and for this reason the trustee was directed to pay the amount of the lien, such payment is neither coercive nor under duress. Hawthorne v. Hendrie, etc., Mfg., etc., Co., 50 Colo. 342, 116 P 122. (3) The fact that plaintiff, a public service corporation, because of being engaged in furnishing its services to manufactories engaged in war work for the government, was compelled by the nature of its business and the then condition of the coal market to pay additional sums demanded in excess of the contract price does not show such compulsion as will warrant a recovery, where defendant did not known of the character of plaintiff's business or did no act or brought no pressure on plaintiff. [b] Payment to preserve credit.—Where a payment is made merely to preserve the credit of the debtor, such payment is not necessarily compulsory. Harvey v. Girard Nat. Bank, 119 Pa. 212, 13 A 202.

[c] Payment of head money.—(1) Where the owner of a vessel carrying alien passengers is shown the statute and told by the superintendent of alien passengers that he is liable to pay head money for each of such passengers, but no force or threats are used, and the owner, through fear that if he refuses to pay such money his passengers will not be allowed to land and his business will be broken up, makes such payment, the payment is voluntary and not under duress. Cunningham v. Boston, 15 Gray (Mass.) 468. (2) But where the superintendent demands head money on these passengers, under color of his office but without lawful authority, and tells the master that if he does not comply with the demand he cannot land his passengers, the payment is by compulsion and the owner of the vessel may maintain an action to recover it back. states that the payment is under protest and does not defeat the right to sue and recover the money, it may be recovered back regardless of whether the facts amount to payment under duress or not.[99]

Protest as evidence. If there is duress or coercion of some character and there is doubt, under the circumstances, as to whether or not the payment was voluntary, the fact that a protest was made may be taken into account in determining the question.[1]

[§ 306] i. Necessity of Protest. As a general rule, if money is paid under compulsion, no protest against paying is necessary to lay the foundation of an action to recover the payment,[2] except where the payment is made to a public officer to prevent some adverse official action,[3] and the officer has no notice of the facts which render the demand illegal;[4] or except where it is made under an illegal statute or ordinance,[5] or is made to prevent the unlawful seizure or retention of the payor's property.[6] A protest is not essential to recover an illegal payment required by a public utility for service.[7]

Where there is a series of payments, the first of which is paid under duress, in order to recover for subsequent payments it must appear either that every payment was made under threat or compulsion, or that all the payments were made under protest.[8]

Sufficiency of protest. Whenever a protest is necessary, it has been held that it must state the grounds upon which the party paying the money claims that the payment is illegal;[9] and a protest served at the time of payment, in order to be effective as evidence, must specify the amount and show on its face that it refers to the payment in question.[10]

[§ 307] 3. Illegality of Duress. To render a payment compulsory the duress must be illegal, unjust, or oppressive.[11] For instance, one cannot recover back money paid under compulsion if it is just what he ought to have paid voluntarily.[12] In other words, the money paid cannot be recovered unless it is against conscience for defendant to retain it.[13]

[§ 308] 4. Source of Duress. The compulsion or coercion must come from the party to whom or by whose direction the payment is made;[14] and the payment cannot be recovered from a person who did not exercise the duress or have knowledge thereof at the time of receiving the money.[15] Where the only coercion influencing the payor's mind is the fear of the consequences of his own acts, it is not a legal duress.[16]

[§ 309] 5. Time of Duress. The duress must have existed at the time the payment was actually made;[17] and a prior compulsion will not render the payment compulsory[18] unless its influence continues up to the time of the payment.[19] Thus, where a promise to pay in the future is obtained by compulsion, and after such compulsion is removed, the payment is made in accordance with the promise, the payment under such circumstances cannot be considered compulsory.[20]

[§ 310] 6. Existence of Other Remedy. The general rule is that, where an unfounded or illegal demand is made upon a person, and the law furnishes him adequate protection against it, or gives him an adequate remedy, and, instead of taking the protection the law gives him or the remedy it furnishes, he pays what is demanded, such payment is deemed to be a voluntary, and not a compulsory, payment,[21] as where the party making the demand is compelled to resort to the courts in order to enforce it, and the payor settles and pays the claim without presenting any defense.[22] Where, however, although there is a legal remedy, the payor's situation or the situation of his property is such that the remedy would not be adequate to protect him from serious or irreparable injury, the payment will be deemed to have been involuntary.[23]

[§ 311] C. Payments Obtained by Fraud.[24] The general rule that a voluntary payment cannot be recovered back[25] has no application where the payment was induced by fraud on the part of the payee,[26] for, subject to the general rules as to what constitutes fraud,[27] it is a well settled rule that, where a payment of money which the payee ought not to retain is induced by fraud and deceit, it may be recovered back by the payor,[28] and if the fraud is the inducement for the payment, the rule applies, although it is not the sole producing cause.[29] In case of conflicting claims to the money, a recovery is not prevented by the fact that the payment was made to the payee upon his false representations, instead of into court, in order that a third person's claim to the money might be litigated.[30] Where, however, a payment is made with full knowledge of the facts, and the fraud, if any, is not an inducement to the payment, the rule as to voluntary payments[31] applies, and such payment cannot be recovered back on the ground of such fraud,[32] as where the fraud relates to the execution of a bill or note and the payment thereof is voluntarily made with full knowledge of the facts.[33] So, also, a payment cannot be recovered back where it is made as a part of a fraudulent transaction, to which the payor is a party,[34] except where he became such by the persuasion that plaintiff was not entitled to practice medicine unless the evidence tended to show that plaintiff had falsely represented himself to be a practicing physician, and had thereby induced defendant to employ and pay him for professional services. (2) Excess payment made by principal to surety. Price v. Horton, 4 Tex. Civ. A. 526, 23 SW 501. (3) Overpayment by contractor on concealment of fact by subcontractor. Watson Co. v. Bleeker, (Tex. Civ. A.) 283 SW 260. (4) Payment induced by falsely antedating an attachment upon real estate, so as to make it appear of record that it was prior to a conveyance. Handly v. Call, 30 Me. 9. (5) Payment of notes given by a customer to his stockbroker in reliance upon a fraudulent account stated. Stiebel v. Lissberger, 166 App. Div. 164, 151 NYS 822 [motion to dism app den on condition 215 N. Y. 685 mem, 109 NE 1093 mem, and aff 222 N. Y. 604 mem, 118 NE 1078 mem]. (6) Excess payment to an actor who, by misrepresentation, obtains better terms than he otherwise would, and is paid accordingly. Dana v. Kemble, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 545.

[b] Misstatements.—Where statements are made by a defendant which induce plaintiff to act in making a payment, if they are untrue he may recover, although no fraud is charged or proved. Ely v. Padden, 13 NYSt 53.

[c] Concealment.—(1) Where money is paid in ignorance of circumstances with which the receiver is acquainted and does not disclose, and which, if disclosed, would have avoided the payment, the receiver acts fraudulently, and the money may be recovered back. George v. Taylor, 55 Tex. 97. (2) Where one who had a bill, the genuineness of which had been questioned, procured specie for it from another, for the purpose of making change with a customer, without calling his attention in any way to the genuineness of the bill, the money could be recovered back. Chalmers v. Harris, 22 Tex. 265.

[d] Money paid by the United States on a fraudulent voucher may be recovered back on a plea of counterclaim. Charles v. U. S., 19 Ct. Cl. 316.

[e] From drunken person.—If moneys are obtained from a person when he is in such a state of inebriation as to be incapable of transacting business, or of knowing what he is doing or the force of his acts, it is a clear fraud, and the money may be recovered back. Hayes v. Huffstater, 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 530.

[a] Money paid under an agreement for a sale of timber cannot be recovered on the ground that there was a misrepresentation as to title, where the purchaser pays the money voluntarily with knowledge of the facts and receives benefits under the contract. Clark v. Milligan, 28 B. C. 22, [1920] 1 WestWkly 1044.

[b] Acts not constituting fraud.—(1) Threats to begin foreclosure proceedings on a mortgage given to secure notes alleged to carry usurious interest. Helmick v. Carter, 171 Ill. A. 25. (2) The mere failure of the judgment creditor and his assignee to inform the judgment debtor of a mistake of the referee in reporting the amount owing is not a fraud entitling the judgment debtor to recover back a payment made on the judgment. Wood v. Amory, 105 N. Y. 278, 11 NE 636. (3) It is immaterial to the right to recover back money paid that the payee's counsel represented that the claim was enforceable, and that, in fact, it was barred by the statute, his assertion being merely an expression of opinion; and it is especially unimportant where it was not relied on, and the payor had the advice of counsel. Parker v. Lancaster, 84 Me. 512, 24 A 952.

[c] Knowledge held insufficient.—The fact that defendants' attorney on foreclosure was told by his grantor that he thought the time for payment of the note and mortgage had been extended beyond the time of suit, but without producing the papers to show it, did not constitute sufficient notice of the extension, which had in fact been made, to bar recovery of the money paid by plaintiff's attorney in reliance on the misrepresentations of plaintiff's counsel to the contrary. sion and influence of the payee who is a person with a stronger mind.[35]

Restoration of benefits.[36] It has been held that a victim of fraud, who is unable, because of changed circumstances, to make full restoration to the wrongdoer of the benefits received, may still recover what he has paid,[37] except where his liability to restore such benefits arises from his having had complete enjoyment of them, and, in so doing, consuming them.[38]

Property transferred in payment. Where, through the fraud of a creditor, a debtor transfers property in settlement of an indebtedness, when in fact nothing is due, the debtor's measure of recovery is the reasonable market value of the property,[39] except in a case where exemplary damages are allowable.[40]

From third person. The defrauded payor cannot recover the money from a third person who has received it in good faith from the defrauding payee.[41-42]

[§ 312] D. Mistake*[43]—1. Of Law—a. In General. Except where it is otherwise provided by statute,[44] it is held by the great preponderance of adjudged cases that, where one under a mistake of law, or in ignorance of law, but with full knowledge of all the facts, and in the absence of fraud[45] or improper conduct upon the part of the payee, voluntarily and without compulsion[46] pays money on a demand not legally enforceable against him, he cannot recover it back;[47] and the rule has been applied

[a] Thus, where the entire transaction by which defendant obtained title to plaintiff's property was fraudulent, his payments for repairs, etc., were voluntary for which he cannot be reimbursed in a suit in equity to set aside the entire transaction. Campbell v. Boyers, 241 Mo. 421, 145 SW 807.

[b] Money paid as a bribe by the beneficiaries in a fire insurance policy to a detective employed by the company, whereby a settlement of the loss has been effected, cannot be recovered on the ground of fraud. Patterson v. Hamilton, 42 SW 88, 19 KyL 825.

[a] Thus, where, through fraud of his creditor, a debtor is induced to believe that an account containing an item which has been paid represents the correct amount of his indebtedness, and therefore transfers a valuable mare to the creditor in settlement of the indebtedness, when in fact nothing is due, the measure of the debtor's recovery is the value of the mare, and not the alleged balance of the debt, under the rule that a party wrongfully deprived of his property may hold the party at fault only for its reasonable market value, except in instances in which exemplary damages are allowable. [a] In California (1) in view of Civ. Code § 1578, providing that a misapprehension of the law by all parties, all supposing that they knew and understood it and all making substantially the same mistake as to the law, is such a mistake as to destroy the reality of consent to a contract, money paid under such a mistake of law may be recovered by the payor. Gregory v. Clabrough, 129 Cal. 475, 62 P 72. (2) But such statute does not apply to payments made under an invalid or unconstitutional statute. See infra § 317 note 78. (3) Under the law as it existed prior to the enactment of such statute, no recovery of money paid under a mistake of law could be had. Christy v. Sullivan, 50 Cal. 337, 19 AmR 655.

[b] In Louisiana (1) Civ. Code art 2301 provides that one who receives what is not due him, whether through error or knowingly, shall restore it, and art 2302, that he who has paid through mistake, believing himself a debtor, may reclaim what he has paid; but it is further provided (art 2303) that to acquire the right to recover, it is necessary that the thing paid be not due in any manner, either civilly or naturally, and a natural obligation to pay will be sufficient to prevent recovery. Bagur v. Bagur, 160 La. 718, 107 S 502; Newgass v. New Orleans, 38 La. Ann. 119, 58 AmR 168. (2) But as to cases not coming within the provisions of the code, the general rule would seem to apply. The case, however, was decided as one of mistake of fact).

[a] Reasons for rule.—(1) "The reason for the rule . . . is . . . bottomed upon some considerations which are logical and well settled. Among these . . . is the maxim ignorantia legis neminem excusat. Likewise the rule touches nearly upon the doctrines of accord and satisfaction, and of estoppel; as also upon the rule forbidding the unsettling of things settled." Lamar Tp. v. Lamar, 261 Mo. 171, 186, 169 SW 12, AnnCas1916D 740. (2) "It is a maxim, born of necessity, that all men are conclusively presumed to know the law. Without this, legal accountability could not be enforced, and judicial administration would be embarrassed at every step." Hemphill v. Moody, 64 Ala. 468, 473.

[b] Knowledge of the facts does not mean knowledge by the payee of "facts as to the existence or validity or meaning of the law, for all these he is presumed to know, but the facts, events, and circumstances which relate to the persons and transactions involved;" and where these facts are known there can be no recovery of a payment made in ignorance of the law or under a mistake as to its validity or meaning. Evans v. Hughes County, 3 S. D. 244, 253, 52 NW 1062.

[c] Rule applied.—(1) To the payment of encumbrances. Peters v. Florence, 38 Pa. 194; Boas v. Updegrove, 5 Pa. 516, 47 AmD 425; Espy v. Allison, 9 Watts (Pa.) 462; Haigh v. U. S. Building, etc., Assoc., 19 W. Va. 792. (2) To the payment of interest at more than the legal rate after maturity under a mistake as to the legal effect of a phrase used in the note. Rector v. Collins, 46 Ark. 167, 55 AmR 571. (3) To the payment of interest on a note secured by a mortgage, which, by reason of the inclusion of an invalid clause providing for the payment of the mortgage tax by the mortgagor, released the mortgagor from the obligation to pay interest, it being held that interest paid on the note was paid in mistake of law, or in waiver of effect of the invalid clause, and could not be recovered back or applied as a payment on the unpaid principal. Harralson v. Barrett, 99 Cal. 607, 34 P 342. But see Hall v. Jackson County, 5 Ill. A. 609 [aff 95 Ill. 352] (where it was held that, where interest is paid under a mistake of law as to liability therefor, while it cannot be recovered back, yet where the principal is not paid in full, the amount paid as interest should be credited on the principal in determining the amount due on the contract). (4) Where a depositor in an insolvent bank paid his note, in ignorance of his right to set off his deposit against it. Westfield v. Houtzdale Bank, 1 Pa. Dist. 767; Westfield v. Dill, 12 Pa. Co. 30. (5) Where a contract was made for the sale of linseed oil with the understanding that 7.50 pounds constituted a gallon by custom among oil manufacturers, and plaintiff received and paid for oil on that basis, whereas by statute the weight of a gallon was fixed at 7.761 pounds. Heath, etc., Mfg. Co. v. National Linseed Oil Co., 197 Ill. 632, 64 NE 732. (6) In an action for sums paid for freight overcharge where freight was shipped under a written contract. Lincoln v. Kuskokwim Fishing, etc., Co., 118 Wash. 137, 203 P 62. (7) Where incorporation fees were paid to secretary of state under an erroneous construction of a statute, there being no duress. Alton Light, etc., Co. v. Rose, 117 Ill. A. 83. (8) To payment of an increased rate by consumer of electrical current supplied by a municipality in the belief that an ordinance enacted by the municipality authorized the increase. Home Coal Co. v. Macon, 216 Mo. A. 590, 262 SW 59. (9) To the payment of a debt barred by the statute of limitation. Wheatfield Tp. v. Brush Valley Tp., 25 Pa. 112.

[d] Mutual mistake.—This rule also applies to a mutual mistake of law by the parties. Washington v. Barber, 29 F. Cas. No. 17,224, 5 Cranch C. C. 157; Parker v. Lancaster, 84 Me. 512, 24 A 952; Jacobson v. Mohall Tel. Co., 34 N. D. 213, 157 NW 1033, LRA1916F 532 [cit Cyc].

[e] In Tennessee (1) recovery of payment made under mistake of law has been denied. Leach v. Cowan, 125 Tenn. 182, 140 SW 1070, AnnCas1913C 188; Dickins v. Jones, 6 Yerg. 483, 27 AmD 488; Walker v. Walker, 3 Tenn. Civ. A. 670. (2) But it has been stated that "there may be such a recovery, even though the transaction was made under a mistake of law; but it must be under such circumstances as the court can see that it would be unconscionable for the party who obtained the advantage in such transaction or settlement to retain that advantage, and e converso, although there was a clear mistake of law, yet if the party benefiting by the transaction may retain the advantage in good conscience, neither a court of law nor equity will give relief to the complaining party." Leach v. Cowan, supra.

[f] In Porto Rico Civ. Code § 1796, which provides that if a thing is received when there is no right to claim it and which, through an error, has been unduly received, there arises an obligation to restore it, refers to an error of fact and not of law, and does not permit the recovery of a payment made under a mistake of law. Marin v. Arecibo, 28 Porto Rico 477; American R. Co. v. Wolkers, 22 Porto Rico 264.

48. Parker v. Lancaster, 84 Me. 512, 24 A 952; Norris v. Blethen, 19 Me. 348; Regan v. Baldwin, 126 Mass. 485, 30 AmR 689; Clarke v. Dutcher, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 674; Beard v. Beard, 25 W. Va. 486, 52 AmR 219. See also cases supra text and note 47.

[a] In Pennsylvania it has been expressly held that, where one makes a payment under a mere mistake of law, with a knowledge or means of knowledge of the facts, even though it be against conscience for defendant to retain it, there can be no recovery back. Millard v. Delaware, etc., R.

as concerns the right to recover voluntary payment, between ignorance and mistake of law.[49] The rule is held to apply to corporations as well as to natural persons,[50] and to be applicable in equity as well as in law.[51] In a few jurisdictions, however, it has been held that a recovery of money paid under a pure mistake of law, or in ignorance of law, will be allowed where in equity and in good conscience the payee had no right to retain it;[52] but where in conscience and justice no recovery should be had, the action does not lie.[53]

[§ 313] b. Limitations of, and Exceptions to, Rule Denying Recovery—(1) In General. The rule obtaining in most jurisdictions that money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered back[54] is not without limitations,[55] and is confined to cases falling strictly within its scope.[56] Thus it does not apply to a payment made under a misapprehension of legal liability induced by an absence of full knowledge of the facts,[57] or by fraud,[58] nor to a payment made under a promise that it would be refunded if it should be found that the payor was under no liability to make it;[59] and it does not prevent recovery of money deposited only as security.[60]

[§ 314] (2) Payments by Public Officers and Municipalities.[61] Although there are decisions to the contrary,[62] the general rule is that payments made by public officers under mistake of law may be recovered back,[63] and that action may be maintained to recover public funds paid without authority, al-

Gilpin, 235 Pa. 524, 530, 84 A 448 (where the court adopts the opinion of the lower court, which quotes with approval the case of Northrop v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548: "We mean distinctly to assert that where money is paid by one under a mistake of his rights and his duty, and which he was under no legal or moral obligation to pay, and which the recipient has no right in good conscience to retain, it may be recovered back . . . whether such mistake be one of fact or law; and this we insist may be done both upon principle of Christian morals and the common law," but which opinion, however, further says: "We are not called upon to decide whether the present case falls outside the general rule. It was tried on the theory of mistake of fact only").

"We do not decide, that money paid by a mere mistake in point of law, can be recovered back. . . . But we mean distinctly to assert, that, when money is paid by one, under a mistake of his rights and his duty, and which he was under no legal or moral obligation to pay, and which the recipient has no right in good conscience to retain, it may be recovered back, in an action of indebitatus assumpsit, whether such mistake be one of fact or of law; and this we insist, may be done, both upon the principle of Christian morals and the common law." Northrop v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 553, 50 AmD 264.

[a] In Georgia (1) a distinction is made between ignorance and mistake of law and it is held that money paid by mistake of law may be recovered back where there is a full knowledge of all the facts, provided the mistake is clearly proved, and defendant cannot in good conscience retain the payment. Whitehurst v. Mason, 140 Ga. 148, 78 SE 938; Culbreath v. Culbreath, 7 Ga. 64, 50 AmD 375. (2) But where a payment is made through mere ignorance of the law, where all the facts are known, and there is no misplaced confidence, and no artifice, deception, or fraudulent practice is used by the other party, an action will not lie to recover it back. Strange v. Franklin, 126 Ga. 715, 55 SE 943; Arnold v. Georgia R., etc., Co., 50 Ga. 304; McCarty v. Mobley, 14 Ga. A. 225, 80 SE 523. Co., 102 Conn. 255, 307, 128 A 302 (where it was said by the court: "We do not question or weaken the authority of Northrop v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, and our many other decisions holding that money paid under a mistake of fact or of law, which the recipient has no right in good conscience to retain, may be recovered back. We do hold that when the parties to a written contract stand on an equal footing as to means of knowledge of their contract obligations, money paid by one to the other, in part performance of the contract, in response to a claim made in good faith and based upon a permissible but erroneous construction of the contract, cannot be recovered back as money paid under a mistake of law").

though paid under a mistake of law.[64] Similarly, while it has been held that the general rule denying recovery applies to municipalities as well as to private corporations and natural persons,[65] the preponderance of authority is that payments made by municipal subdivisions of the state under mistake of law may be recovered back,[66] and that, where municipal officers have no authority to allow a bill or pass on its validity, the act is void, and the voluntary character of the payment is no defense to a suit by the municipality to recover the money which has thus been illegally paid.[67] However, it has been held that, where payments are allowed and made by municipal authorities acting within the scope of their authority, but under a mistake of law, there can be no recovery.[68]

[§ 315] (3) Payments to or by Officers of Court. The general rule denying recovery of payments made under a mistake of law[69] does not apply to payments to an officer of the court,[70] and such payments may be recovered;[71] but payments made by such officers under mistake of law are not recoverable.[72]

[§ 316] c. What Constitutes Mistake of Law[73]—(1) In General. It is often difficult to distinguish between mistakes of law and of fact.[74] A mistake of law occurs where a person is truly acquainted with the existence or nonexistence of facts, but is ignorant of,[75] or comes to an erroneous conclusion as to,[76] their legal effect.

during the pendency of a suit on the demand.[83] The right of recovery under such circumstances is known to the civil and Roman law, as well as to the common law,[84] and is bottomed upon the equitable doctrine that an action will lie for the recovery of money received by one to whom it does not in good conscience belong, the law presuming a promise to repay.[85] The rule applies to payments made to or by public and governmental agencies as well as private persons.[86]

Payments other than in money.[87] The general rule applies to payments made in a medium other than money,[88] in which case the medium paid, or its value, may be recovered.[89]

Mistakes both of law and of fact. The right to recover a payment because of a mistake of fact is not prejudiced by the existence also of a mistake of law in the transaction.[90]

Qualifications of rule. The rule permitting recovery of payments made under mistake of fact being founded upon considerations of equity and good conscience,[91] there can be no recovery of a payment from which the payor has received a substantial benefit,[92] or which the payee has received in good faith and may in good conscience retain,[93]

A. 410] (holding that, where a mortgagor in settlement of his debt conveyed the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, and in the transaction was not allowed a payment previously made on the debt, he could not recover the amount of such payment as money paid by mistake, his remedy, if any, being in equity).

But see Hendricks v. Goodrich, 15 Wis. 679 (holding that, where a creditor accepted a horse valued at a certain sum in payment of a balance, which he knew his debtor mistakenly thought to be of the same amount as the value of the horse, when in truth it was a much lesser amount, the debtor could not recover the difference between the true amount and the value of the horse in an action to recover money paid by mistake of fact, as his remedy was to rescind the contract on account of fraud, and he must do so in toto; and could not affirm the contract in part and disaffirm it as to the rest).

[a] Negotiable paper.—(1) Where the amount of negotiable certificates of indebtedness, given and received in payment of a debt, were by mistake of fact larger than the amount due, and the certificates have been negotiated to a bona fide purchaser, so that the maker will be forced to pay them, the amount of such excess may be recovered from the person to whom the certificates were issued. Donohue v. New York, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 37. (2) The amount of a note, given and received in payment of an account previously paid, through mistake and without knowledge of the previous payment, may be recovered as money paid by mistake of fact. [§ 319] b. What Constitutes Mistake of Fact.[95] A mistake of fact, within the meaning of the rule allowing recovery of payments made thereunder,[96] is such error or want of knowledge as to a fact, past or present,[97] or such belief in the past or present existence as a fact of that which never existed,[98]

Youngs v. Stahelin, 34 N. Y. 258. (3) An innocent purchaser of a stolen automobile cannot recover an amount paid to satisfy a mortgage given to secure a note executed by the thief for a bona fide loan by mortgagee, the debt secured being actual and enforceable, although the mortgage was invalid, so that the payment was not without consideration, or made by mistake as to the indebtedness paid. Terry, (Ky.) 114 SW 759; Merchants' Ins. Co. v. Abbott, 131 Mass. 397; Walker v. Conant, 69 Mich. 321, 37 NW 292, 13 AmSR 391; Ball v. Shepard, 202 N. Y. 247, 95 NE 719; Nassau Bank v. Newburgh Nat. A. 200, 201 SW 368. (2) Where one entitled to the money on a second execution assented to its payment to plaintiff on the first execution, on the mistaken assumption that the property sold had been seized by the sheriff on the first execution within the time allowed by law and while the lien of the first judgment existed, such payment was made under a mistake of fact. Kingston Bank v. Eltinge, 40 N. Y. 391, 100 AmD 516. (3) Where an automobile delivered to a conditional buyer was not equipped with a lock called for by the contract of purchase, and was stolen, and thereafter, or such real and honest forgetfulness of a fact once known,[99] as that a true recollection or knowledge of the fact, or of its existence or nonexistence, would have caused the payor to refrain from making the payment. Accordingly, the mistake must be in respect of a material fact,[1] which operated to influence the payor's judgment at the time the payment was made,[2] and the existence or nonexistence of which was relied upon in making it.[3] A mistake which authorizes recovery exists only when the payor is unconscious of any error or ignorance,[4] and not where he is conscious of a want of knowledge of the facts,[5] or is uncertain or doubtful or speculates concerning them,[6] nor where they are disputed,[7] except where there was an agreement for return of the payment if mistake on the part of the payor should appear.[8] It is not essential to the right of recovery that the mistake should be caused by any wrongful or fraudulent act or conduct of the payee.[9]

Failure to foresee a future event is not a mistake of fact.[10]

Ignorance of means of proving facts. Mistake of fact is to be distinguished from ignorance of the means of proving facts,[11] for if the payor has knowledge of the facts themselves, and lacks only a knowledge of proof of them, there is no mistake of fact,[12]

Payment under contract. While an erroneous construction of the terms of a contract is a mistake of law and not a mistake of fact,[13] a mistake in makbecause of the seller's threats to sue on the note, the buyer paid installments due under the belief that the automobile was equipped with such lock, he was entitled to recover the payments made. Smith v. Hellman Motor Corp., 122 Misc. 422, 204 NYS 229. (4) A payment made to an express company by the father of a messenger in belief that the messenger had by carelessness lost an express package between the train and the office, whereas in fact the package had been delivered by him to the office and stolen therefrom by another employee, as to whom the company was protected by a surety bond, was made under a mistake of fact. Lowe v. Wells, 78 Kan. 105, 96 P 74. (5) Where, under a broker's contract of employment, his commission was not earned by merely obtaining a purchaser's signature to an executory contract of purchase which the purchaser was unable to perform, money paid at the time the contract was executed under a mistaken belief that the purchaser was able to perform was made under a mistake of fact. Anderson v. Spaulding, 197 Iowa 858, 197 NW 1000. (6) Where the purchaser of a private bank paid for the invested capital and surplus of the bank a sum equal to the amount thereof as represented by the sellers, the excess of the amount so paid over the actual amount of the invested capital and surplus was recoverable. Tyler v. Goddard, 207 Ill. A. 526. (7) A partial payment of the agreed price for drilling a well made at a time when it had reached the depth at which the contractor had guaranteed a certain delivery of water, but before the well had been tested, was made under mistake of fact and therefore was recoverable when it was determined by test that the well was not of the capacity guaranteed. Blackburn v. Texarkana Gas, etc., Co., 102 Ark. 152, 143 SW 588. (8) Where the payee of certain notes, secured by a deed of trust, fraudulently induced the maker of the notes to execute duplicate notes, and a purchaser of the property subject to the deed of trust made payment of one of the fraudulent notes to the payee's transferee under the mistaken belief that the note was one of the genuine notes secured by the deed of trust, the payment could be recovered. ing a payment called for by a contract is a mistake of fact;[14] but a payment made in accordance with the terms of a contract erroneously entered into is not a payment under mistake of fact within the rule permitting recovery.[15]

Order or decree subsequently set aside. Money paid under an order or decree of court subsequently set aside is paid under a mistake of fact, and not of law.[16]

Ownership of, and title to, property. While the ownership of, and title to, property is ordinarily a mixed question of law and fact,[17] a payment made under mistake in relation thereto is usually treated as made under a mistake of fact rather than a mistake of law.[18]

Ignorance of foreign law. Ignorance of the law of a foreign nation or of another state is ignorance of fact rather than ignorance of law.[19]

Ignorance of set-off or counterclaim. The fact that one pays money in ignorance of facts showing a right of set-off or counterclaim against the payee is not such a mistake of fact as will authorize the recovery of the amount paid.[20]

[§ 320] c. Mutuality of Mistake. It is held in some jurisdictions that to authorize recovery of money paid under a mistake of fact it is not essential that the mistake be mutual;[21] but in other jurisdictions the rule is that there can be no recovery of a payment made under a unilateral mistake,[22] except where there has been fraud or misconduct

14. Tyler v. Goddard, 207 Ill. A. 526; Graves v. Brinkerhoff, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 305, 6 Thomps. & C. 630; Normandy Waist Co., Inc. v. Palmer, 176 NYS 465; Union Trust Co. v. Gilpin, 235 Pa. 524, 84 A 448. See Chicago v. Weir, 165 Ill. 582, 46 NE 725 [aff 67 Ill. A. 247] (apparently applying the rule). Compare Morrison v. Payton, 104 SW 685, 31 KyL 992 (holding that, where the owner of property entered into a contract for the construction of a house thereon at a specified price, agreeing to advance the money for the materials, and paid to the materialman, who relied on the agreement, for such materials an aggregate sum in excess of the contract price for the house, such excess was not paid by mistake either of fact or of law and cannot be recovered back).

[a] Mistake in reading instrument not mistake of construction.—A payment made as the result of a mistake in reading a will is to be distinguished from a payment made under a mistaken construction of the will, and is made under a mistake of fact and not a mistake of law. Union Trust Co. v. Gilpin, 235 Pa. 524, 84 A 448.

[a] Void judgment.—Where one pays a void judgment, by mistake of law and fact, believing it legally enforceable against him, he can recover back the amount so paid. Lichtwadt v. Murphy, 182 Ky. 490, 206 SW 771.

[b] Reason for rule.—(1) So long as the decree remains in force, or remains unreversed, even though it may be erroneous, or may be void, it may be said that the money was paid under a mistake as to the legal effect of the decree, and the party paying it is not entitled to have it restored to him; but when the decree requiring its payment is set aside by a court having jurisdiction to the end, there is no longer any decree, and instead of the money being paid under a mistake of law it was paid under a mistake of fact, for it was paid in the mistaken belief that there was a decree requiring its payment, when in fact there is no such decree. Simmons v. Simmons, 91 W. Va. 32, 112 SE 189. (2) But where plaintiff paid a judgment and secured a release so that he might be relieved of the lien upon a portion of his real estate which he desired to convey, upon the judgment being afterward stricken off by the court as being illegally entered, plaintiff being liable for the payment of the money irrespective of the judgment in question, it was held that the payment was voluntary and there could be no recovery. Wagner v. Beaver Valley Water Co., 9 Pa. Dist. & Co. 90.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) While a mistake as to title is generally one of law when the facts are known, yet the error may be as to some fact lying at the foundation of the title and necessary to its existence; so, where rents of property leased were payable to an administrator in his representative capacity, and a receiver appointed of such administrator's individual property collected the rents by representing that he was entitled thereto, and the tenants paid them in reliance upon such representation, it not appearing that the tenants were aware of the proceedings under which the receiver was appointed, the money so paid was paid under a mistake of fact and could be recovered back. Barker v. Clark, 12 AbbPrNS (N. Y.) 106. (2) It being established that the sale of certain stone by defendant to plaintiff was under a mutual mistake of the parties as to the ownership of the stone and the right of plaintiff to sell, the mistake was one of fact, although it may have arisen because the parties misjudged the law, private ownership being a matter of fact notwithstanding it may result from a question of law. [a] Rule stated.—"It is well settled that if one party to a contract seeks to set it aside for mistake he must show one of two things, viz.: (1) Either that there was a mutual mistake of fact, or (2) such mistake on the part of the party seeking to set aside the contract, and conduct on the part of the other party amounting to fraud in taking advantage of a mistake which he knows is being made by the one with whom he is dealing. In regard to payments of money on a contract, a party seeking to set aside the payment is not compelled to prove so much. It is sufficient if he prove that he alone made a mistake (even though negligently) in paying the money, unless the circumstances are such that it would be unfair and inequitable to compel the party, receiving the payment, to return it." [a] Rule stated.—"Ordinarily, when recovery is sought on the ground of complainant's mistake alone, the action is not maintainable if the defendant would not be left in statu quo, or unless he had been guilty of some fraud, misrepresentation or would secure some unconscionable advantage by withholding the money. In the instance of a mutual mistake the party paying thereunder may ordinarily recover without regard to the special equities involved as to where the loss will fall. In such a case it is mainly a question of fact. The inquiry is, were both parties in error as to the real facts, and did both act thereon? The answer to this question controls the issue." Mathews v. Kansas, 80 Mo. 231, 235.

upon the part of the payee,[23] or the parties are not on equal terms,[24] or unless the recovery would leave defendant in statu quo.[25]

[§ 321] d. Applications of Rule[26]—(1) Payment of Interest. Recovery of a payment of interest may be had where, by mistake of fact, the interest was computed on a principal sum on part or all of which no interest was demandable,[27] or compound instead of simple interest was paid,[28] or a larger amount of interest was paid than was due,[29] or the interest had already been paid.[30]

[§ 322] (2) Payment of Lien or Encumbrance. Subject to the qualification that a payment honestly due to the payee or which he may in equity and good conscience retain is not recoverable,[31] a payment of an apparent lien or encumbrance on property which the payor owns or in which he has an interest may be recovered from the payee when made under a mistake of fact.[32] Similarly, one who pays a supposed lien upon his property, when in fact none exists, may recover the amount paid.[33]

[§ 323] (3) Overpayment.[34] Where one by mistake of fact pays more than is due upon a debt or obligation, he may recover the overpayment.[35]

[§ 324] (4) Payment to Wrong Person. Money paid by mistake of fact to the wrong person may ordinarily be recovered.[36] But, in accordance with the rule denying recovery of a payment which the payee receives in good faith and may in conscience retain,[37] where the payor owes the payee a debt which is due and which equals or exceeds the amount of the payment, and the payment is received by the payee in good faith, it cannot be recovered, although made to him by mistake.[38]

[§ 325] e. Want of Care in Ascertaining Facts—(1) In General. Notwithstanding the rule, sometimes applied, precluding recovery of a payment made by mistake by one who failed to use available means of obtaining knowledge,[39] it is generally held that negligence of the payor in failing to discover the facts will not prevent recovery when the payment was actually made under mistake of fact,[40]

unless the payee has changed his position in reliance upon the payment.[41]

[§ 326] (2) Failure To Inquire, and Waiver. It has been held in some cases that, where one has the means of obtaining knowledge of the facts, and, through failure to avail himself of that knowledge, has been led into the payment of money by mistake, it cannot be recovered from the payee.[42] The weight of authority, however, is to the effect that mere failure to avail oneself of means of knowledge will not prevent recovery,[43] unless it appears that

[a] In Massachusetts (1) it would appear from the language used in some cases that plaintiff's negligence would prevent a recovery in case of a payment made by mistake of fact (Rosenfeld v. Boston Mut. L. Ins. Co., 222 Mass. 284, 110 NE 304; Blanchard v. Low, 164 Mass. 118, 41 NE 118); (2) but it has been held that plaintiff's negligence, which caused no damage to defendant, was not a ground of defense in an action to recover money paid under mistake of fact (Appleton Bank v. McGilvray, 4 Gray 518, 64 AmD 92); (3) that the negligence of one paying a draft in failing to discover want of indorsement would not prevent recovery, the negligence being merely a failure to discover an error made by the payee (Quimby v. Carr, 7 Allen 417); (4) and that failure to take disinterested legal advice or to make full investigation of the validity of an assignment was not such negligence as would prevent recovery of a payment made upon the assumption that the assignment was invalid (Montgomery Door, etc., Co. v. Atlantic Lumber Co., 206 Mass. 144, 92 NE 71).

[b] Where the payee is also negligent, a payment made under a mistake of fact may be recovered even though the payor was also guilty of negligence, and even though the payee has altered his portion in reliance upon the payment, if the payor's laches grew out of the payee's error or mistake. Union Bank v. U. S. Bank, 3 Mass. 74; Dominion Bank v. Union Bank, 40 Can. S. C. 366.

[c] Rule applied.—(1) In an action by a railroad company to recover money paid by it to the consignor of certain goods under the mistaken supposition that they had been lost, defendant's plea of plaintiff's negligence was no defense in the absence of any showing that defendant was injured thereby. New York, etc., R. Co. v. Ansonia Electrical Co., 83 Conn. 462, 76 A 1004. (2) Where a bank negligently paid by mistake to a bona fide holder a certified check, which after certification had been fraudulently altered by raising the amount, it can recover back the sum thus paid, regardless of its negligence, unless the holder had suffered a loss in consequence of the mistake. [a] In Massachusetts the rule is that, where the facts are equally open for the inquiry and judgment of both parties, the payee has a right to assume that the payor relied wholly on his own means of information and there can be no recovery. Alton v. Webster First Nat. Bank, 157 Mass. 341, 32 NE 228, 34 AmSR 285, 18 LRA 144.

[b] In North Carolina the rule is that, if the payment is made in ignorance or mistake of fact, it cannot be recovered back where the means of knowledge or information is in reach of the party paying, and he is negligent in obtaining it. Brummitt v. McGuire, 107 N. C. 351, 12 SE 191; Adams v. Reeves, 68 N. C. 134, 12 AmR 627. But see Simms v. Vick, 151 N. C. 78, 80, 65 SE 621, 24 LRANS 517, 18 Ann Cas 669 (where the rule was said to be: "Nor is it sufficient to preclude a party from recovering money paid by him under a mistake of fact, that he had the means of knowledge of the fact, unless he paid it intentionally, not choosing to investigate the fact." The facts in that case were that an illiterate debtor in making final payment of his debt forgot one of his payments and the receipt therefor, so that he paid more than was due by reason of his forgetfulness).

ample, failure to render services,[66] or to fulfill a condition upon which the payment was made.[67] However, where the thing in contemplation is not contracted for, or warranted, and becomes impossible of performance through no fault of the party,[68] or performance thereof has been waived,[69] there can be no recovery. Nor can there by a recovery by the payor where he is in default.[70]

[§ 331] F. Payment upon Void or Illegal Contract. The right to recover money paid under the terms of an illegal or void contract has been treated elsewhere in this work.[71]

[§ 332] G. Actions[72]—1. In General. Generally an action as law[73] may be maintained for the recovery of money, the payment of which was induced by threats or duress,[74] fraud,[75] or mistake,[76] under circumstances which give rise to the right of recovery. And the principles controlling an action for money had and received still govern in those jurisdictions where the distinction between forms of action have been abolished.[77] Where a recovery is permissible, it may be by way of counterclaim or set-off as well as by a direct action.[78] One to whom money should have been paid cannot maintain an action for its recovery from one to whom it was paid,[79] as there is no privity between them.[80] Nor can an action be maintained against one benefiting from a payment made to another.[81] Where the payment sought to be recovered was paid in installments, they should all be included in one cause of action.[82]

[a] What constitutes sufficient certainty.—A complain in an employee's action to recover tips paid over to his employer under a misapprehension of his rights which alleges that he received as tips an average of two dollars a week, or one hundred dollars a year, and that during five years and ten months he worked for defendant, he received altogether five hundred and seventy-five dollars, is sufficiently definite. Polites v. Barlin, 149 Ky. 376, 149 SW 828, 41 LRANS 1217.

mere conclusions.[95] Where recovery of a payment is sought by way of cross demand, the facts necessary to establish the right to recover must be alleged with the same particularity as in the case of an original demand.[96]

Plea or answer. The answer, or other pleading by way of defense, must contain allegations or denials of facts sufficient to bar recovery.[97]

[§ 336] 5. Evidence—a. Burden of Proof. In accordance with the rules relating to the burden of proof in civil actions generally,[98] the burden is upon one seeking to recover payments made to prove the facts entitling him to recovery;[99] and the burden rests upon the party resisting recovery to show matters of affirmative defense,[1] such as ratification of the payment,[2] or that it would be inequitable to require restitution.[3] So the burden rests upon the payee to prove facts to bring the payment within the exception,[4] that no recovery of a payment may be had when the payor receives substantial benefit therefrom, or the payee may in good conscience retain it.[5]

[§ 337] b. Presumptions.[6] In actions to recover payments made, it will ordinarily be presumed that money belongs to him who received it, when it is voluntarily paid him,[7] and that payment was not made under duress.[8] Failure to call an available witness, possessing peculiar knowledge of essential facts, will give rise to an inference that the testimony of such witness would be unfavorable.[9] The fact that the payor had available to him means of knowledge of the facts creates no presumption

[a] Allegations of "threat" and "duress" mere conclusions.—It is not sufficient merely to characterize defendant's conduct as "threat" or to allege that the payments were made "under duress." The complaint must state facts which constitute a legal basis for the charge of compulsion or involuntary payment, so that the court can see that the pleader's conclusion of law is justified. [a] Allegation of mutual misunderstanding (1) is not equivalent to an allegation of a mistake of fact. Maloy v. Bannon, 169 App. Div. 716, 155 NYS 712. (2) A pleading, by way of counterclaim, to recover money paid, alleging that it was paid under a mutual misunderstanding of the parties is insufficient, as this is not equivalent to an allegation that it was paid under a mistake of fact. Maloy v. Bannon, supra.

[b] To show mistake of fact a plea of set-off for money paid by defendant to plaintiff on a note, not knowing it to be without consideration, is fatally defective if it does not specify how the note was without consideration or why defendant was ignorant thereof. Tillman v. Morton, 65 Ga. 386.

See West Frankfort Bank, etc., Co. v. Baretti, 206 Ill. A. 261. (4) Overpayment. Konz v. Henson, (Tex. Civ. A.) 156 SW 593 (payment for plaintiff's benefit by third person). (5) Right to retain payment. New York v. Erben, 23 N. Y. Super. 189, 24 HowPr 358 [aff 38 N. Y. 305, 3 Abb. Dec. 255, 7 Transcr. A. 270] (facts showing that defendant was misled and lulled into silence until after the period when he could correct the mistake, and only received what in equity and good conscience he was entitled to). (6) Failure of consideration. Beier v. Spaulding, 92 Hun 388, 36 NYS 1056 (interview between plaintiff and defendant's agent, and representations of agent). (7) Irrevocable change of payee's position. New York Bank v. Simmons, 117 Misc. 103, 190 NYS 602 (that second payee to whom fund was paid as result of original mistake was out of county and there could be no recovery from him).

[b] Evidence held inadmissible to show: (1) Duress. Jett v. Jett, 171 Ky. 548, 188 SW 669 (testimony to prove slanderous words spoken, in action to recover money alleged to have been paid under threat to sue for slander). (2) Fraud. Gilliam v. Alford, 69 Tex. 267, 6 SW 757 (that parties making settlement were in need of money to prevent sale of property under lien). (3) Mistake. H. F. Dangberg Land, etc., Co. v. Day, 247 Fed. 477, 159 CCA 531 (statement not made in presence of defendant that a carbon copy was a copy of the original contract); George v. Thompson, 52 App. (D. C.) 168, 285 Fed. 902 (that husband did not know terms of wife's contract upon which he made payment for her convenience); McRae Oil, etc., Co. v. Stone, 119 Ga. 516, 46 SE 668 (that vendor of cotton seed, where mistake of weight was alleged, did not consent that it should be reweighed); Wilson v. Storm, 164 Ill. A. 13 (negotiations preceding a trade of land, and value of the land involved); Eslow v. Albion, 153 Mich. 720, 117 NW 328, 22 LRANS 872 (receipt, agreement, and protest relative to payment of previous license). (4) Freedom from mistake. Gardner v. Nichols, 80 W. Va. 738, 93 SE 817 (purpose of issuance of warrant claimed to have been paid by mistake).

[c] Cross-examination.—(1) Wife who testified that she was compelled by threats and duress to pay a debt that she claimed she was not under legal obligation to pay may be asked on cross-examination whether she had not admitted that the debt was her own, and that she always intended to pay it. Stanley v. Dunn, 143 Ind. 495, 42 NE 908. (2) It is error, in an action to recover an overpayment, to allow an agent, to whom a payment had been made and who had carried it without paying it over, to be cross-examined as to his financial standing. Ryan v. Conway, 93 Iowa 513, 61 NW 924.

[d] Account books.—(1) In an action to recover overpayment, account books could be introduced in evidence only on complying with statute, and showing correctness thereof, but witness could refresh his recollection from such books within the rule. Thompson v. Burnsmeyer, (Iowa) 171 NW 584. (2) Defendant cannot introduce his own cash book, in corroboration of his testimony to show the amount received by him. Townsend Bank v. Whitney, 3 Allen (Mass.) 454.

[e] Evidence in support of ground of recovery not alleged.—Where a mistake was made in settling an account, it cannot be shown in absence of pleading alleging the mistake. Third St. Impr. Co. v. McLelland, 23 Cal. A. 369, 137 P 1089.

actions,[13] questions of fact are for the jury.[14] Thus it is for the jury to determine, where the evidence is conflicting, whether the payment was made under duress,[15] was voluntary or involuntary,[16] was induced by fraud,[17] or was made under a mistake of fact,[18] or whether there was an overpayment.[19] Similarly, whether the facts disclose a ratification of the payment,[20] an estoppel,[21] or a waiver of the right to assert that a payment was made under such circumstances as will permit of its recovery,[22] is likewise to be determined by the jury upon conflicting evidence.

Where the facts are undisputed, however, the question as to whether the payment may be recovered is one of law.[23]

[§ 340] b. Instructions. As in other civil actions,[24] the instructions in actions for the recovery of payments made must clearly state the law of the case,[25] must be applicable to the issues,[26] and not misleading.[27] Requested instructions stating correct propositions of law should be given by the court where justified by the evidence,[28] unless fully and fairly covered by instructions already given.[29]

[§ 341] c. Verdict and Findings. The general rules as to verdicts and findings in civil actions[30] apply in actions to recover money paid.[31] A finding of facts insufficient to show the nature of a payment cannot be aided by a statement therein, by way of conclusion, that it was involuntary.[32] A finding that a payment was voluntary will not support a conclusion that it was made under a mistake of law, since it might have been induced by mistake of fact.[33]

Conclusiveness. Where there is conflict in the

[a] Question of law and fact distinguished.—What constitutes duress is wholly a matter of law. The means by which that condition of mind is produced are matters of fact, and whether such condition was in fact produced is usually wholly a matter of fact, although the means may be so oppressive as to render the result an inference of law. [a] In an action by a wife to recover her money paid by her husband under duress in settlement of an alleged cause of an action against him for slander, instructions were held correct which told the jury, in substance, that if they believed from the evidence that the defendants, either or both of them, by threats or violence, by duress or by putting him in fear, compelled plaintiff's husband to sign and deliver to them a check for one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, and that defendants received the money thereon; and if they should further believe from the evidence that the money was the property of plaintiff, they should find for her against the defendants in the sum of one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, with interest, and unless the jury so believed, they should find for defendants; and further if the jury believed from the evidence that the defendants obtained the money sued for in the manner described, and further believed from the evidence that the money, or any part thereof was the money of the plaintiff, then they should find for her in an amount equal to so much of the fund as they might believe from the evidence, if any, was the money of plaintiff, not exceeding the amount sued for and interest. Jett v. Jett, 171 Ky. 548, 188 SW 669.

[b] In an action to recover money paid to prevent sale of land.—Plaintiff's attorney having paid certain notes for him, which were secured by deed of trust on his homestead, had them indorsed by the holder in blank, and, without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, sold them to defendant and appropriated the proceeds to his own use. Plaintiff in order to prevent defendant selling the property under foreclosure of the deed of trust paid the amount of the notes and then brought suit to recover on the theory that it was paid under duress. An instruction, that if defendant bought the notes in question after maturity, and they were sold by the attorney without plaintiff's knowledge or authority, and plaintiff on demand having refused to pay the notes, defendant advertised the property for sale under deed of trust, and that in order to prevent the sale of the land under the deed of trust plaintiff paid the notes a second time, then he was entitled to recover is erroneous. [a] In an action to recover money paid to defendant through the latter's fraud, it is the court's duty, in leaving the question of fraud to the jury, to explain to them what they can consider in determining it, and what will constitute such fraud as will authorize the relief. PAYMENT INTO COURT.[1] The act of depositing property with an officer of the court for safekeeping, pending litigation;[2] for example, until a question as to the person entitled to its possession is determined;[3] a deposit of money in court.[4] Payment of money into court may be an acknowledgment of the right of action to the amount of the sum brought in;[5] but beyond that it acknowledges nothing.[6] The payment does not waive the benefit of any defense,[7] even to the whole cause of action.[8]

PEACE.[12] [§ 1] A. In General. The tranquillity enjoyed by the citizens of a municipality or community where good order reigns among its members;[13] the tranquillity enjoyed by a political society internally by the good order which reigns among its members.[14] It is the natural right of all persons in a political society.[15]

In its legal signification, quiet, orderly behavior of individuals to one another and toward the government;[16] public quiet, order, and security;[17] public tranquillity and obedience to law.[18] Hence, that public order and security which is commanded by the laws of a particular sovereign, lord, or superior, and hence, analogously, of the peace established by any laws.[19]

In a technical sense, as applied to the internal regulations of a nation, not merely a state of repose or security as opposed to one of violence or warfare, but likewise a state of public order and decorum;[20] the quiet, security, good order, and decorum which is guaranteed by the constitution of civil society and by the law.[21]

Phrases: "Against the peace and contrary to the statute,"[22] "against the peace and dignity of the State,"[23] "contrary to the laws of the State, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof,"[24] "necessary for the peace, good order, health and safety of the town,"[25] "peace and quiet,"[26] "peace and quietude,"[27] "peace, health, and safety;"[28] also, "ten days after peace is made."[29]

[§ 2] B. In the British Dominions. A quiet and harmless behavior towards the king and his people.[30]

*By WILLIAM QUINBY DEFUNIAK (Payment into Court—Penalties inclusive except the Spanish words and phrases).

"The King's Peace" is the legal name of the normal state of society.[31]

"The Peace" is the king's peace in its widest sense; the general peace and order of the realm as provided for by law.[32]

[§ 3] C. Public Peace.[33] A condition of order that conforms to the requirements of the laws;[34] public tranquillity[35] and that quiet, order, and freedom from agitation or disturbance which is guaranteed by the laws;[36] that invisible sense of security which every man feels so necessary to his comfort, and for which all governments are instituted;[37] that sense of security and tranquillity so necessary to one's comfort, which every person feels under the protection of the law.[38]

In the British dominions, it may be taken as equivalent to "the King's Peace" in its broader and later signification.[39]

[§ 4] D. Time of Peace. When the courts of justice are open, and the judges and ministers of the same may by law protect men from wrong and violence, and distribute justice to all.[40] In contradistinction to time of war, it means not a mere cessation of hostilities, but peace in the complete sense, officially declared.[41]

PEACEABLE.[42] A word which is broad and flexible in meaning, and takes on color from the facts.[43] Being in or at peace;[44] free from, or not disposed to, war, disorder, or excitement;[45] not quarrelsome;[46] peaceful;[47] quiet.[48]

Peaceable entry.[49] An entry not opposed by the person claiming the premises;[50] an intrusion, although peaceable, on another's actual possession.[51]

Peaceable occupation.[52] An occupation commenced without threats or force, and continued without any attempt being made to interrupt it.[53]

Peaceable possession.[54] A possession acquiesced in by all others, including rival claimants, and which need not be maintained by force or threats;[55] possession continuous and not interrupted by adverse suit to recover the estate;[56] a possession so clear that no one denies the fact of the possession, whether actual or constructive;[57] a possession undisturbed by any act of a person in or upon the locus in quo, for which act such person would be suable in an action by which the title to the property could be determined;[58] any possession where a person, although setting up a claim of title, has not interfered with possession by any act suable at law by a suit which may or will involve his claim of title;[59] an undisturbed possession of unbroken continuity;[60] an uninterrupted possession.[61] The expression has a meaning very similar to, if not the same as, "quiet enjoyment."[62]

"The only provision in the Indian Law for a Peacemakers' Court is found in article 4 (as amd. by Laws of 1914, chap. 508), relating to the Seneca Indians. Provision is there made for the election of three peacemakers for each of the reservations; the holding of the Peacemakers' Court of each such reservation, defining its authority; the making of rules and enforcing them; the bringing of parties and witnesses into court; administering oaths to witnesses; fixing the time within which the determination of the court must be made; the keeping of a record of the transactions of the court, and the power to award costs. However, the right of the court to award damages is limited to $100. As to the Allegany and Cattaraugus reservations of the tribe, the court is also given the exclusive power to grant divorces between the Indians residing upon the reservation, and to hear and determine all controversies between individual Indians residing thereon, involving the title to real estate on such reservations." the denomination of "peddling."[62] The term "peddling" refers to the manner in which the business is carried on, and not to the business itself.[63] However, it has been defined as the occupation of an itinerant vendor of goods who sells and delivers the identical goods he carries with him, and not the business of selling by sample and taking orders for goods to be thereafter delivered and to be paid for wholly or in part upon their subsequent delivery.[64]

PEDDLER'S NOTES.[66]

PEDDLING.[67]

PEDERASTIA. In Spanish law, sodomy.[68] By the ancient code known as "forum judicum,"[69] it was punished by castration.

PEDERASTY. As commonly understood, sodomy;[70] but more properly, as defined in the dictionaries, improper intimacy or sodomy between members of the male sex.[71]

PEDESTRIAN.[72] A walker; a foot traveler.[73]

PEDIDOS. In Spanish law, tribute from towns; donations sought by the sovereign in emergencies.[74]

PEDIGREE.[75] A word commonly called the "family tree;"[76] the history of family descent which is transmitted from one generation to another by both oral and written declaration;[77] a line of ancestors;[78] the lineage, descent, and succession of a family;[79] and the term embraces not only descent and relationship, but also the facts of birth, marriage, and death, and the times when these events happened;[80] the order of descent in families, including births, marriages, and deaths;[81] a succession of the degrees from the origin; it is the state of the family as far as regards the relationship of the different members, their births, marriages, and deaths.[82] The term is not limited to the human race, but is equally applicable whether the question concerns horses, cattle, dogs, or men.[83]

PEDIMENTO. In Spanish law, a forensic petition; first pleading.[84]

PEDIS POSITIO.[85]

PEDIS POSSESSIO or POSSESSIO PEDIS. Actual bona fide occupation;[86] actual occupancy;[87] actual possession;[88] a foothold upon land accompanied with the real and effectual enjoyment of the estate, with the reception of its fruits, its rents, issues, and profits;[89] occupancy in fact of the whole that is in possession;[90] subjection to the will and to customers. Ex p. Noyd, 48 Nev. 120, 227 P 1020, 1025. control;[91] substantial possession.[92] Pedis possessio is usually evidenced by occupation,[93] by a substantial inclosure,[94] by cultivation,[95] or by appropriate use according to the particular locality and quality of the property.[96]

PEEP-ABO A term that may imply libidinous conduct.[97]

PEERAGE. The actual state and dignity of a peer;[98] the status of a peer.[99]

PEERS.[1] In its ordinary meaning, equals; those who are a man's equals in rank and station;[2] members of the British nobility.[3] In its legal use, the word originally meant the vassals of a lord who sat in his court as judges of their covassals;[4] in this country the word really means citizens, and nothing more.[5]

PEG OUT. To mark or outline with pegs.[6]

PEGUJAL. In Spanish law, the fund which a father concedes to his son while still in his power.[7]

PEINE. Literally, punishment.[8] As used in French law the word does not correspond to our word "penalty," but corresponds more nearly to our expression "liquidated damages."[9]

PELTRY. Pelts or skins,[10] collectively, skins with the fur on them; furs.[11]

PEN.[12] As a noun. An inclosure[13] of greater or less dimensions and with no requisite form.[14]

"Pen" is also an abbreviation of "penitentiary."[15]

As a verb. To confine[16] in a small inclosure or narrow place.[17]

PENA. In Spanish law, penalty; punishment.[18]

PENAL.[19] A word which in its strict and primary sense denotes punishment, whether corporeal or pecuniary, imposed and enforced by the state for a crime or offense against its laws[20] Also commonly used as including any extraordinary liability to

[a] "Peine" and "penalty" distinguished.—"I think any difficulty the case may present has arisen from the fact that similar terms have not perhaps quite the same meaning in English and in French law. In the latter the word 'peine' does not correspond to the word 'penalty' as construed by the English courts. Whilst the exact amount of the former may be recovered irrespective of damage, it is only so much of the latter as represents the actual damage sustained that the party in default can be made liable for. To some extent, therefore, the word 'peine' corresponds more nearly to 'liquidated damages' than to a penalty." Canadian Gen. Electric Co. v. Canadian Rubber Co., 52 Can. S. I. DEFINITION

[§ 1] Within the scope of this title, a pension is a periodical allowance[1] of money granted by the government in consideration of services rendered,[2] or of loss or injury sustained in the public service.[3] The term "pension" has been compared and distinguished from "compensation,"[4] "corody,"[5] and "salary."[6]

1. [a] "Accrued pensions," as used in the pension laws, means the amount of money unpaid by the government to which a pensioner, or one who had a valid pending claim for pension, would be entitled at his death. 19 Op. Atty.-Gen. pp 1, 2.

2. See cases infra this note; and infra § 2 text and note 13.

II. OBJECT AND NATURE

[§ 2] Pensions, it is said, are mainly designed to assist the pensioner in providing for his daily wants.[7] A pension is not a matter of contract,[8] and is not founded upon any legal liability.[9] No man has a legal vested right to a pension;[10] it is a mere bounty[11] or gratuity[12] given by the government in consideration or recognition of meritorious past services,[13] or of loss or damage sustained in the public service,[14] and "springing from the appreciation and graciousness of the sovereign."[15] It may be bestowed on such persons and upon such terms as the lawmaking body of the government prescribes.[16] And "its payment must be made and accepted in exact conformity with the terms of the grant, and must be subject to all the limitations, conditions, and exceptions therein contained."[17] It is, at most, an expectancy granted by the law.[18] And although existing pension laws may entitle one to a pension, the government may, at its pleasure, at any time, change the amount thereof[19] or revoke or destroy it altogether.[20]

III. STATUTORY PROVISIONS[21]

[§ 3] A. Necessity and Validity. Inasmuch as a pension is not a matter of contract, but a mere bounty or gratuity on the part of the government,[22] it necessarily follows that statutory authority for the giving of pensions is indispensable. However, the matter of granting pensions has been made the subject of legislation in England[23] and in the United States both by congress and some of the state legislatures;[24] and the validity of both federal[25] and

[a] Embezzling ward's pension money.—An act of congress making it an offense for a guardian to embezzle or convert to his own use the pension of his ward is not unconstitutional, on the ground that, inasmuch as the state law authorizes the guardian to receive the pension money, accused could not be subjected to an indictment under an act of congress for embezzling it after he lawfully received it; or on the ground that a guardian is a state officer and as such is not subject to the laws of congress in the performance of his duty; or on the ground that the act is municipal in its character, oper-

state[26] pension laws has generally been upheld as against objections that they were in violation of the organic law of federal or state government, although some statutes have been declared invalid because in contravention of some constitutional provision.[27]

[§ 4] B. Construction. While it has been held that a statute making it a criminal offense to violate a pension law must receive strict construction,[28] it has been uniformly held that laws creating the right to pensions must be liberally construed[29] with the view of promoting the objects of the lawmaking body;[30] and their force and effect are not to be conformed to the literal terms of the statute.[31]

IV. PENSION AGENCIES AND PENSION AGENTS

[§ 5] A. Pension Agencies. Within certain limitations prescribed by statute, the president of the United States is vested with the power to establish agencies for the payment of pensions granted by the United States, whenever in his judgment the public interests and the convenience of the pensioners require it.[32] He also has power not only to create such agencies, but to enlarge the bounds thereof after their creation;[33] and this he may do by consolidating two or more pension agencies into one, or discontinuing some agencies and transferring the business thereof to others.[34] An incumbent of an agency, enlarged by the transfer thereto of the business of discontinued agencies, is competent, without any new appointment, to discharge the duties thereof as well after as before the enlargement.[35] So, also, the president has power to discontinue an agency,[36] in which event the functions of the incumbent cease.[37]

[§ 6] B. Pension Agents—1. Appointment and Status. Pension agents are officers of the department of the interior,[38] are appointed by the president of the United States with the advice and consent of the senate,[39] and take their instructions from the commissioner of pensions.[40]

[§ 7] 2. Bonds. Where there exists a rule of the department requiring an accounting before a new bond is accepted, and a pension agent substitutes by permission a new bond for his official one, the approval of the secretary of the interior, indorsed on the second bond, does not constitute an acceptance of it to stand in lieu of the first bond.[41]

Liability on bond. The general rule that a surety is not bound beyond the scope of his liability[42] applies to a bond given by a pension agent for the faithful performance of his duty.[43] But where the boundaries of an agency are enlarged by the officer authorized to do so,[44] a bond conditioned for the faithful discharge of all the duties of the office "according to the laws and instructions which are now in force, or which shall be in force at any time during the continuance of the agent in office," is broad enough to cover the case of an incumbent of an agency which may be enlarged during his incumbency and upon whom increased duties may in consequence devolve.[45]

Actions on bond. A pensioner cannot maintain an action in his own name on the official bond of a pension agent, in the absence of a covenant in such bond for his benefit.[46] Where no demand has been ating directly on the conduct of individuals, and that it assumes to take the place of ordinary state legislation; or on the ground that matters of police regulation are not surrendered to congress, but are exclusively within the state legislation; or on the ground that it assumes the power of making police regulations which belongs to the state. U. S. v. Hall, 98 U. S. 343, 25 L. ed. 180.

[b] Retaining excessive fee.—(1) An enactment making it an offense for an agent to retain a greater fee than that prescribed for procuring a pension is constitutional, the power to secure to the pensioner the residue of the pension granted being an incident of the power of congress to grant pensions. U. S. v. Fairchilds, 25 F. Cas. No. 15,067, 1 Abb. 74; U. S. v. Marks, 26 F. Cas. No. 15,721, 2 Abb. 531. (2) And such enactment does not trench on the right of a state to regulate contracts between its citizens. U. S. v. Van Leuven, 62 Fed. 52; U. S. v. Marks, supra.

[a] Change in the law affecting a pension does not impair the obligation of a contract or take private personal property without due process of law within the meaning of the constitutional provisions of the state and federal governments. (2) Under a constitutional provision that no pension shall be granted but in consideration of actual services, a pension—so-called old-age pension—or a pension the right to which depends upon age alone, cannot be given by the legislature. [§ 8] 3. Liability on Payment to Wrong Person. Where money has been set apart to a claimant and the state pension agent directed to pay it and he takes the money and pays it to one not entitled to receive it, thus putting it beyond the power of the person entitled to it to collect it, the agent is liable therefor.[48]

V. PERSONS ENTITLED

[§ 9] A. In General. Congress has designated in minute detail the persons entitled to pensions from the United States government.[49]

"Line of duty." Where the pension is given to persons disabled by reason of any injury received or disease contracted in the service of the United States and "in the line of duty," a disease or injury cannot be regarded as having been contracted in the line of duty unless the service was the cause of the disease or injury.[50]

Pardon and removal of disabilities of one who has been discharged from the army rendering him eligible for reappointment does not operate to make the officer pardoned eligible to a pension under a statute which requires that an applicant must be "honorably discharged" from the army or navy of the United States.[51] Statutes, upheld as valid,[52] have been enacted by the legislatures of some of the southern states, providing for pensions for Confederate soldiers,[53] or for Confederate soldiers and their widows,[54] or for Confederate soldiers, sailors, and their widows,[55] or for Confederate soldiers or their widows and children.[56] And in some states provision has been made for the granting of pay for services performed by the Indian War veterans, the pension being limited by its terms to the veteran in propria persona.[57]

In England there is no statutory right to payment of pensions to persons in military or naval service. Such right, as it is, depends upon the king's regulations and admiralty instructions.[58] Pensions, however, are given by statute to designated persons in the various branches of the civil service.[59]

[§ 10] B. Widow[60]—1. Remarriage. Except where otherwise expressly provided by statute,[61] the remarriage of a widow to another, after the death of,[62] or divorce from,[63] the husband, as the wife of whom she was entitled to a pension, terminates her right to the pension thereafter, although her second husband is dead,[64] and although the second marriage was illegal when she did not repudiate it[65] or when she procured its dissolution by divorce instead of having it annulled for illegality.[66]

be brought from time to time on the bond of any officer for the benefit of any person injured by a breach thereof, relates only to the bonds of officers of the state, and has no application to bonds of officers of the United States. Hughes v. Cotton, 13 Bush (Ky.) 596.

"Both as to the particular persons entitled and the particular circumstances giving the right to a pension, the laws are very precise, and they constitute a system of regulations for the whole subject." U. S. v. Scott, 25 Fed. 470, 471.

[a] Service in militia.—A person enlisted in a regiment of state militia under the president's call for volunteers, and who was engaged in the service of the United States under the command of an officer of the army, has a pensionable status, although the regiment was not actually mustered into service. 20 Op. means a wife that outlives her husband, one who intermarries a pensioner and afterward obtains a decree of divorce absolutely dissolving the marriage is not entitled on the death of the pensioner to be placed on the pension rolls as his widow.[67]

[§ 12] C. Children. The word "children" in a pension act declaring who shall be entitled to its benefits does not embrace an adopted child,[68] but it does embrace the grandchildren of deceased pensioners, whether their parents died before or after the decease of the pensioner.[69] Where grandchildren are not named in the statute, they are included in the equity of the statutes.[70] So, too, the word "children" in a pension act embraces an illegitimate child, if its parents afterward intermarried and the father acknowledged it, so that it thereby became legitimate under the laws of the state where the parents resided.[71] Where a pension is granted to a widow, the children have no interest in it during the mother's life.[72]

A surviving child, the widow and other children being dead, is entitled to the whole of the pension to which the father would be entitled if living.[73]

[§ 13] D. Dependents. Under an act providing that, if one has died entitled to a pension leaving persons dependent on him for support at the time of his death, such persons shall be entitled to the pension, one is regarded as a dependent when he requires for his support the use of certain realty in which the pensioner has an interest as heir.[74] But where the statute provides that the pension allowed to any person on account of dependence shall not be paid for any period during which it shall not be necessary as a means of adequate subsistence, an alleged dependent who has made a contract with a third person for her support is not entitled to any pension from the date of such contract.[75]

[§ 14] E. Personal Representatives. As elsewhere shown, claims for pensions, accrued pensions, or arrears of pensions, do not constitute assets of the pensioner's estate to be applied to his debts.[76] And where, by statute, payment is made to the personal representatives of the pensioner for the benefit of the children, they take and hold the same in trust for the children[77] and cannot retain it for the purposes of administration.[78] However, they are entitled to retain from the amount paid them a necessary incidental expense for the faithful execution of the trust.[79] Under statutes of this character, if the pensioner left no children, the representatives are not entitled to payment of arrears due the pensioner, because there are no persons for whose use they are entitled to receive the money.[80] Under a statute providing that "hereafter any balance of pension money due a member of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at the time of his death shall be paid to his widow, minor children, or dependent mother or father in the order named," and "that if none such should be discovered within one year said balance shall be paid to the post fund of the branch of said national home of which the pensioner was a member at the time of his death," the United States is not liable to the administrator of a deceased pensioner, for arrears of pension, paid a soldier's home of which the pensioner was an inmate, where he left surviving him no widow, minor child, or dependent father or mother.[81]

VI. RATE AND AMOUNT

[§ 15] A. Discretion of Bureau Regarding. The discretion of the head of the pension bureau to interpret the laws relating to pensions includes the rate due a claimant for a given disability.[82]

[§ 16] B. Total Disability. Under a statute providing that the widow of a pensioner shall be entitled to the pension that he would have been entitled to had he been totally disabled, she is not entitled to a pension in excess of that amount regardless of the amount of pension which he was receiving.[83]

[§ 17] C. Double Pension. In the absence of express provision to the contrary, the pension laws will be so interpreted as to prevent any person from receiving a double pension.[84] However, it has been held that allowances under a statute providing for payment of money benefits to disabled enlisted men and petty officers in the navy or marine corps in illegal and her right to the pension not determined thereby, and on such application she alleged that her second husband, at the time of her marriage with him, had a wife living, and that she was cognizant of this fact when she instituted her suit for divorce, but remained silent, it was held that, by permitting the suit against her second husband and procuring a decree which in effect affirmed the validity of her marriage while declaring its dissolution, claimant rendered the objection of illegality of the second marriage unavailable in support of the claim for pension so long as the decree dissolving the second marriage stood unaffected or judicially unimpeached).

It is clear that the whole is given to the offspring of the father as a class. If there is more than one child, they have a joint estate, so to speak, in the pension. The statute disposes of the whole. No part of it reverts or falls back to the government until the last child arrives at the age of sixteen years or until his death before reaching that age").

[a] Not to be drawn under both general and special acts.—It was competent for congress to pass the act of July 25, 1882, providing that "no person who is now receiving or shall hereafter receive a pension under a special act shall be entitled to receive, in addition thereto, a pension under the general law, unless the special act expressly states that the pension granted thereby is in addition to the pension." U. S. v. Teller, 107 U. S. 64, 67, 2 SCt 39, 27 L. ed 352.

lieu of maintenance in the Naval Home in Philadelphia, if they so elect, do not fall within the prohibition of a statute prohibiting more than one pension at the same time to the same person and may therefore be paid in addition to a pension under the pension laws.[85] So it has been held that, where a state government grants an annuity to the invalid daughter of a soldier of the Civil War by an act of the assembly which in no way limits or restricts the annuity, the right thereto is not affected by a subsequent grant of pension from the United States government.[86]

[§ 18] D. Increase or Decrease. The government may at any time change the amount of pensions granted by it.[87] Under an act increasing the pensions of all pensioners of a given class, such pensioners are entitled to the increase no matter when they make their application for it;[88] But the benefits of the act cannot be extended to pensioners who do not belong to such class at the time of the passage of the act.[89] A pension bureau may decrease the rate of pension being received by a pensioner under the ruling of a former bureau, on the ground that the proof of disability submitted did not entitle the pensioner to the rate granted.[90]

VII. COMPENSATION AND FEES FOR OBTAINING[91]

[§ 19] A. Amount Recoverable. The amount of the fee which any agent or attorney shall demand or receive for his services in prosecuting a claim for a pension granted by the United States is fixed by statute,[92] for the protection of the pensioner,[93] and has always been the subject of regulation by law of congress.[94] The statute prescribing the fee is not limited to persons who are recognized or known to the commissioner of pensions as attorneys or agents of applicants for pensions.[95] No person is entitled to demand or receive for services in procuring a pension more than the sum prescribed by law,[96] and if the services are such as are within the contemplation of the statute, they determine the amount of compensation.[97] Hence the agent or attorney cannot recover more than the prescribed fee on a quantum meruit,[98] and any contract for a larger fee for prosecuting a pension claim than is allowed by law whether made by the claimant himself or by a third person in his behalf is void and unenforceable.[99] Nor can the statute be evaded by any device or contrivance whatever,[1] such as an agreement, in consideration of services to be rendered in procuring a pension, to apply the pension when obtained toward an existing indebtedness,[2] or to submit to arbitration a demand for an excessive fee.[3] But the statute does not prevent reimbursement for money advanced for actual expenses incurred in prosecuting the pension claim,[4] or recovery for services rendered for the person claiming the pension after the certificate therefor is issued,[5] or recovery for services performed and expenses incurred by a guardian in procuring a pension for his ward.[6]

[§ 20] B. Lien for Services.[7] Since any pledge of any right, claim, or interest in any pension is void,[8] one who had been the means of procuring a pension has no lien on the certificate pledged by anticipation to secure compensation for his services and no right to retain it,[9] and if he refuses to deliver the certificate upon request he is liable in an action for recovery of its value or of damages resulting from its retention.[10]

[§ 21] C. Payment by Third Person. The intention of the statute is to prohibit the recovery from a third person as well as the pension claimant any compensation for services in procuring a pension, other or greater than that provided by statute.[11]

[§ 22] D. Recovery Back of Excessive Amount. Money taken from the pensioner in excess of the prescribed fee for services in obtaining a pension may, the parties not being regarded as standing in pari delicto,[12] be recovered back by the pensioner from the taker by direct suit[13] or as a set-off in an ac-

"The principal object of these provisions of the statutes undoubtedly was to prevent oppressive charges, by determining the amount which should be received by attorneys for services in procuring pensions; and, for the security of the attorney, the amount was made payable to him directly out of the pension; but if attorneys were at liberty to make contracts for additional fees with third persons, this object of the law might in a great measure be evaded. The money paid by third persons, even if it were not paid at the request of the pensioners, or if paid at their request, even if it were held that, by reason of the statute, no legal obligation rested on them to repay it, would in fact often be repaid by them to satisfy the moral obligation arising from an acceptance of the services." Her ignorance of the law, or her folly, if not ignorant of it, is excusable, but his is not. He commits a wrong; she does not. She cannot defraud herself. The statute would be nullified by a different interpretation").

tion against the pensioner.[14] The right of the pensioner to recover is necessary for the protection which the statute was intended to give him.[15] And the right to recover from the taker is unaffected by the fact that the excessive fee was obtained without any wrongful intent on the part of the taker,[16] or by the fact that the pensioner, when paying or allowing the fee, was not aware of the statutory protection.[17]

Recovery from subagent. It has been held, however, that, where a subagent receives from the general government a pension under an agreement with the pensioner that one half of it is to be paid to the agent's principal, and, before any demand or objection on the part of the pensioner, one half is accordingly paid to such principal, no action will lie for its recovery from the subagent.[18]

VIII. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE

[§ 23] A. Jurisdiction. Except in the case of certain benefits authorized to be paid to disabled enlisted persons or petty officers in the navy or marine corps in lieu of being provided with a home in the Naval Home and Asylum at Philadelphia, applications for which are required by statute to be made and passed on by the secretary of the navy,[19] the interior department is the special tribunal of judicial or quasi-judicial powers appointed by law to ascertain all the facts and to adjudicate and allow the pension to the party entitled,[20] and the entire administration of the pension laws is in the control of that department.[21] The commissioner of pensions is the officer whose special duty it is, under the direction of the secretary of the interior, to consider and determine all questions arising under the pension laws [22] and to administer and carry them into execution.[23] However, the pension bureau is not a court,[24] nor is the commissioner of pensions [25] or any other officer connected with the pension bureau [26] invested with judicial functions.

[§ 24] B. Application or Declaration—1. In General. The first regular substantial step taken by a claimant to obtain a pension [27] is the filing of his verified [28] declaration or application.[29] As regards its sufficiency, literal adherence to form is not required,[30] and, if claimant is identified,[31] the time and place of his service [32] and the injury or disease which constitutes the ground of his claim [33] are substantially set forth, it will be sufficient. The application is subject to amendment for defective statements.[34]

False statements in the application, even if they were intentionally false,[35] will not invalidate the pension,[36] except where it appears that they were material and necessary to the granting of the pension.[37]

[§ 25] 2. Proof. The declaration or application must, of course, be supported by affidavits or other proof.[38] The statute being silent on the subject, the affidavits may, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the commissioner of pensions, be sworn to before any officer duly authorized to administer oaths for general purposes.[39] After the application is made, the necessary forms and instructions as to the proof of the claim are furnished to claimants by the commissioner of pensions.[40]

[§ 26] 3. Repeal of Statute pending Application. An absolute repeal of a pension law leaves unfinished applications without any tribunal to pass upon them.[41]

[§ 27] C. Effect of Decision. Where the commissioner of pensions passes on a claim and finds claimant to be entitled to the pension, and directs it to be paid, such finding is conclusive as to the rights of claimant,[42] and puts him upon the footing of an acknowledged creditor of the government to an ascertained amount.[43] On the other hand, if the finding is against the right to claim a pension, the decision is equally conclusive.[44] A decision on the

IX. COMMENCEMENT AND TERMINATION

[§ 29] A. Commencement—1. In General. In accordance with the general rule[49] a pension act operates prospectively, and not retrospectively, where there is nothing in the act to show a contrary legislative intent.[50] Under the act of March 26, 1804,[51] it was the settled rule of the commissioners of the navy pension fund, and later of the secretary of the navy when their powers were transferred to him by the act of July 10, 1832,[52] to provide that the pensions should commence from the time of completing the proofs.[53]

[§ 30] 2. Acquiescence of Pensioner. Whenever a decision fixing the time for the commencement of a pension has been acquiesced in by the pensioner, it cannot after his death be contested by his personal representatives.[54]

[§ 31] B. Termination—1. In General. The government may terminate a pension at its pleasure,[55] as by repealing the statute under which the pension was granted,[56] without violating any constitutional provision.[57]

[§ 32] 2. Striking Name from Roll. The power to strike from the pension roll a name placed thereon through fraud or fraudulent representations[58] extends to all pensioners and may be exercised on ex parte evidence.[59] And under an act by congress making it the duty of the secretary of war to strike from the list of pensioners the name of any person who, according to the evidence the schedule required by the act, ought not, in his opinion, to remain thereon, the secretary has no power to restore on subsequent and different evidence the name of any person who may have been stricken off on the evidence of the schedule.[60]

[§ 33] 3. Adulterous Cohabitation by Widow. Open and notorious adulterous cohabitation by a widow who is a pensioner shall operate to terminate her pension from the commencement of such cohabitation.[61]

X. ASSIGNMENT, PLEDGE, OR OTHER TRANSFER[62]

[§ 34] A. In General. Except where prohibited by statute,[63] a pension granted for past services may but not named in decree.—A decree awarding a pension to certain persons, specifically naming them therein, as children of a deceased widow, who was entitled to a pension under the act of July 4, 1836, but did not draw it, when in fact only part of the children were named, is conclusive upon those not named in the decree, and can only be corrected upon reëxamination by the commissioner at his discretion, subject to an appeal to the proper secretary. [b] State statute.—A pension is not assignable under a state pension law providing that "any person who shall speculate or purchase for a less sum than that to which each may be entitled, the claim of any soldier or sailor, or widow of a deceased soldier or sailor, allowed under the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." Gill v. Dixon, 131 N. be assigned,[64] but the rule is otherwise where the pension is granted by the government to one who, although not at the time engaged in active duties, is still liable to actual service, and is therefore to be considered in the service of the government.[65]

[§ 35] B. What Constitutes. The act of congress[66] has been held to refer to the pension before it has been reduced to the possession of the pensioner and taken into his custody and control.[67] A voluntary gift of a check for pension money by the pensioner to his wife[68] or son,[69] or a verbal promise by a pension claimant to pay a debt when he receives his pension,[70] does not constitute such a pledge, mortgage, assignment, transfer, or sale of the pension claim as is forbidden by the acts of congress. And a rule of a soldiers' home requiring inmates to pay over to the home pension money in excess of a certain amount does not violate this statute, and is a valid regulation.[71] On the other hand, it has been held that any agreement by which an agent or attorney is to receive a part of the pension in payment for his services in procuring it is within the prohibition of the statute, and void;[72] but there is authority to the contrary.[73]

[§ 36] C. Recovery of Certificate Pledged. If a pension certificate has been pledged in violation of the statute, the pensioner may maintain an action against the pledgee to recover possession thereof.[74]

XI. PAYMENT

[§ 37] A. In General. The payment of pensions is within the jurisdiction of the commissioner of pensions.[75] He is required to issue certificates of pension and notify claimant or his attorney of the allowance made and the amount thereof and to forward the certificate to the pension agent who is to pay the money.[76]

[§ 38] B. What Constitutes. The receipt of a check by a pensioner which he has only indorsed, but which has not been transferred by him in his lifetime, is not a payment,[77] but is only one step in the process of payment.[78]

[§ 39] C. To Whom Made—1. In General. The pension laws expressly provide that no pension shall be paid to any person other than the pensioner entitled thereto.[79]

[§ 40] 2. Payment to Wrong Person. One entitled to a pension is not deprived of his right thereto by the fact that a certificate for the pension has been issued and payment made to the wrong person,[80] and if the executor of a pensioner, not his widow, is entitled to his unpaid pension, then the payment to the widow by the government is in its own wrong and the executor may still justly demand payment to himself from the proper department.[81]

[§ 41] 3. Forbearance To Demand. Forbearance of one during his life to demand payment of a pension granted to him upon proper application therefor does not extinguish the debt, but it remains due and can only be discharged by payment to his personal representatives.[82]

[§ 42] D. Warrants. Under a pension statute,[83] providing that the forms for pension warrants shall be prescribed by the comptroller and that they shall be uniform in size, arrangement, matter, form, etc., the comptroller has power to make such warrants negotiable or quasi-negotiable by making them payable to order.[84] And it was further held that a

It was said that "because of the peculiar conditions limiting the right to receive pensions in this state to the indigent, we think the general rule should not be given application, but, as has been said of the Act of Congress forbidding the sale or assignment or transfer of any right, claim, or interest in pensions granted thereby, our act should be given such a construction 'as will suppress the mischief—the mischief of preying upon the necessities of the poor and ignorant' ").

The check was designed to be negotiated to banks or others who would cash the same. The claim was so far settled that a transfer of the check could not be deemed prohibited by the statute." Farmer v. 72. Powell v. Jennings, 48 N. C. 547. See Schwab v. Ginkinger, 181 Pa. 8, 37 A 125 (where the court, in holding that a voluntary gift of a check for pension money is not illegal under the prohibitory provision of the pension laws, lays stress upon the fact that during the transaction there was nothing said about the donee having the check as a compensation for his services in procuring the pension). See also Payne v. Woodhull, 13 N. Y. Super. 169 (recognizing this rule). But see Jenkins v. Hooker, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 435 infra note 73.

[a] Reason for this view.—"The act, being for the protection of those, who, in ninety-nine cases in a hundred, are poor, needy and ignorant, should receive such a construction as will carry out the benevolent intention of the donors of the bounty. Like the statute of frauds, it should receive a liberal construction; such a construction as is consistent with the words, and as will suppress the mischief—the mischief of preying upon the necessities of the poor and ignorant." [a] Reason for this view.—"It gives to the plaintiff no interest in the pension, either legal or equitable. It provides for no transfer or assignment. If the pension should be allowed, the pensioner himself, or his representatives, alone could receive it. Whether received or not, the pensioner, the moment the increase was allowed to him, became the debtor of the plaintiff in a sum equal to one third of its amount. The plaintiff had no claim upon the pension, the allowance of which he had thus obtained, for the payment of the amount due him upon the agreement, any more than any other creditor. Upon the death of the pensioner, his debt, like any other debt, could only be collected through a legal course of administration. He was to take his chance of payment with other creditors. The agreement fixed the amount in which the pensioner was to become indebted to the plaintiff for his services by the amount of the pension to be allowed, but it gave him no lien upon it. He had no security for his debt, beyond any other creditor." Jenkins v. Hooker, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 435, 438.

74. Moffatt v. Van Doren, 17 N. Y. Super. 609 (holding further that proof of a grant of a pension certificate to plaintiff, that it is in possession of defendants, and that upon a demand made upon defendants to surrender it, they refusing so to do, not only entitles plaintiff to recover, but makes it a case which renders it impossible in the nature of things for defendants to prove any facts operating as a bar to the action or modifying in any respect plaintiff's right to the whole relief sought).

consideration of the several acts relating to pensions showed that the legislature intended to make, and did make, a distinction between pension warrants and all other pay warrants issued by the comptroller,[85] and that it is not necessary to the validity of pension warrants that they be countersigned by the state treasurer before they are issued and sent out by the comptroller.[86]

[§ 43] E. Recovery Back—1. Grounds. Pension moneys, paid to a claimant under mistake of law, cannot be recovered back.[87]

Mistake of fact or fraud. In accordance with well settled principles relating to the payment of money,[88] pension money paid by the government under a mistake of fact[89] or fraudulently obtained in payment of a false claim for a pension[90] may be recovered back. The government is not bound by the act of its executive officers in granting a pension upon improper or fraudulent testimony.[91] The United States can recover from a bank presenting pension checks to, and receiving the money therefor from, a subtreasury where the names of the payees have been forged;[92] and the right to recover is not conditioned upon either demand or the giving of notice of the discovery of facts which, by the operation of the legal warranty, were presumably within the knowledge of the bank;[93] but, in construing the act of congress of December 21, 1893,[94] it was held that the United States cannot recover from a bank which has cashed a number of pension checks drawn to the order of one who had been placed on the pension roll by reason of his fraudulent representations, while such pension was in force and before cancellation on notice.[95]

[§ 44] 2. Jurisdiction and Mode of Recovery. The United States district court has jurisdiction of an action by the United States to recover money fraudulently obtained by defendant in payment of a false claim for a pension.[96] Pension moneys may be recovered back either by direct suit[97] or by way of set-off against a different claim in favor of the pensioner against the government.[98]

XII. INVESTIGATION OF SUSPECTED ATTEMPTS TO DEFRAUD

[§ 45] Methods for the investigation and ascertainment of fraud committed in obtaining or attempting to obtain pensions are provided for by the act of July 25, 1882.[99] Section 3 of this act[1] was originally held unconstitutional on the ground that congress is without authority to employ the courts to obtain evidence for the executive departments;[2] but the rule is now settled to the contrary and the validity of the statute upheld.[3] Application for the subpœna authorized by the act[4] may be considered as the foundation of the proceedings,[5] and it should be drawn with reasonable certainty and precision so that it should clearly appear upon its face to be in accordance with the act,[6] and the pension claims in which the testimony is required should be reasonably identified.[7] And the subpœna issued under it should follow the requirements of the application.[8] The examination con-

[a] Statutory provision that a pension shall be deemed and held by all officers of the United States to be a vested right in the grantee, and that payment thereof shall not be withheld or suspended until the commissioner of pensions after a hearing shall decide to annul or modify the decision by which it was granted, applies only to action by executive officers, and does not affect the right of the United States to proceed through the courts civilly to recover pension money, payment of which was induced by false testimony. Pooler v. U. S., 127 Fed. 509, 62 CCA 307.

[b] Facts not authorizing recovery for fraud.—The government cannot recover back pension money on the ground that it was obtained by false statement on the part of defendant that he contracted a certain disease in service and in the line of duty, where it appears that, although defendant might have contracted the disease before he enlisted in the service, yet he was cured of it, so that he was a sound man when he enlisted but subsequently contracted it again while in the service and in the line of his duty. [a] Reason for rule.—"The United States is not chargeable with the knowledge of the signatures of the vast numbers of persons entitled to receive pensions, and the exceptional rule as to certain classes of commercial paper that the person having knowledge of the genuine signature of the payee whose signature is forged is negligent in paying on such an indorsement and therefore cannot recover, does not apply to the United States in regard to pension checks." templated by the statute can be held only on notice to claimants,[9] and the witness is entitled to have an attorney present at the examination so long as he conducts himself properly.[10] The investigation need not be confined strictly to the merits of pension claims,[11] but must be upon the subject of pension claims.[12] A special pension examiner has neither power nor right to extort a confession of violations of the criminal provisions of the pension laws by a witness at a special examination,[13] although there is no intention of prosecuting the witness therefor.[14]

Fees. The fees of witnesses subpœnaed in proceedings of this character and also the fees of the commissioner by whom their testimony is taken may properly be allowed out of the judiciary fund.[15] The fees of the witnesses should be paid by the United States marshal of the district on the certificate or order of the commissioner,[16] and the fees of the commissioner should be paid as in ordinary course on settling his accounts at the treasury.[17]

XIII. OFFENSES UNDER PENSION LAWS

[§ 46] A. Exacting Improper Fees[18]—1. In General. By the act of congress of July 4, 1884 chapter 181 section three[19] and section four,[20] the constitutionality of which has been upheld,[21] the demanding, receiving, or retaining of certain fees by any agent, attorney, or other person is denounced and prohibited.

Object of the statutes is to protect the pension claimant from the exaction of exorbitant charges,[22] and also to protect the government by discouraging the prosecution of unjust claims.[23]

Construction. The statute, being a penal statute[24] and also being in derogation of the common-law right of every person to make his own bargain,[25] should receive a strict construction.[26]

Persons liable. Any person who is instrumental in the prosecution of the claim may be prosecuted for the violation of the statute,[27] and it is not essential to liability that he should be a pension agent or attorney.[28]

What constitutes offense. Neither fraud nor extortion[29] nor guilty intent[30] is an element of the offense of demanding or receiving a fee for obtaining a pension in excess of that prescribed by the statute; but the fact of its demand or receipt completes the offense,[31] without regard to the fact whether the pension money has or has not been received,[32] or to the fact that no demand was made for a return of the amount paid in excess of the legal fee.[33] Nor is it essential that there should be a formal demand for an excessive fee to constitute a violation of the statute;[34] any request, direct or indirect, by the agent for a larger fee than that prescribed will be sufficient.[35] The statute cannot be evaded by any device or contrivance whatever,[36] such as the making of a loan[37] or gift[38] or the execution of a mortgage.[39] But it is not violated if the pensioner, after obtaining his pension, voluntarily makes a bona fide gift or loan of a sum in excess of that prescribed, and such gift is not intended or received as a compensation for the donee's services.[40] Nor does the prohibition of the statute as to excessiveness of compensation cover reimbursement for money advanced and actual expenses incurred in prosecuting the pension claim,[41] or services entirely distinct from those usually required in prosecuting a claim for a pension.[42] And the statute does not apply to a claim for reimbursement out of an accrued pension by one who bore the expenses of the last sickness and burial of the deceased pensioner, nor to the agent or attorney of such claimant.[43] In an indictment for demanding and receiving compensation for prosecuting a pension claim before the claim is allowed,[44] it is unnecessary to allege that the amount so received was in excess of the sum legally chargeable,[45] or that the applicant for the pension had been in the military or naval service of the United States, as the statute does not make this a condition of receiving a pension.[46] making it an offense for an agent or attorney to demand or receive for his services in a pension case a sum in excess of that prescribed by the statute[48] does not affect a prosecution for a previous violation of the statute, unless the contrary is expressly provided in the repealing act.[49]

[§ 48] 3. Indictment.[50] An indictment for this statutory offense[51] may set forth the offense in the language of the statute creating it.[52] It is not necessary to allege malice,[53] or a guilty knowledge,[54] or intent;[55] nor how accused was instrumental, or what he did, in procuring the pension;[56] nor is it necessary to allege a demand for a return of the money wrongfully taken.[57] And the indictment need not negative the existence of a contract in regard to the fee, since under the statute it is unlawful to receive, even by contract, a fee in excess of that prescribed.[58]

[§ 49] B. Wrongfully Withholding Pension Money—1. In General. The act of congress making the wrongful withholding of pension money a criminal offense[59] is constitutional,[60] and is not rendered inoperative by the provision that no pension shall be paid to any person other than the pensioner entitled thereto.[61]

Purpose of the statute is to protect the pensioner against fraud until the unconditional payment of the money to him.[62]

Construction. The statute, being penal,[63] must be strictly construed,[64] and it is essential that the claim be plainly and unmistakably within the statute.[65]

Persons liable. In order to come within the statute, defendant must have been instrumental in prosecuting the pension claim as agent or attorney or otherwise.[66] But the statute applies to any agent or attorney, and not simply to the regular attorney for the pension claimant recognized as such at the pension office.[67]

What constitutes offense. To constitute the offense there must be some unreasonable delay, some refusal to pay on demand, or some such intent to keep the money wrongfully as would constitute an unlawful withholding within the meaning of the law.[68] There must be an actual withholding of the money before it reaches the hands of the pensioner.[69] It is not enough that it is fraudulently obtained from him after it reached his hands.[70] It must also appear that the person from whom it is alleged the pension money is wrongfully withheld is a pensioner of the United States,[71] that the amount wrongfully withheld is the whole or part of a pension or claim allowed and due such pensioner,[72] and that accused is the person through whose instrumentality the claim was prosecuted.[73] However, the statute does not confine the offense to a wrongful withholding of money collected on the claim, but includes the holding against the will of the pensioner of the check or treasury warrants coming into the hands of the agent;[74] and where accused has wrongfully withheld pension money, a subsequent payment or an agreement to pay it all will not relieve the offense of its criminal character.[75]

[§ 50] 2. Limitation of Prosecution.[76] Whenever an act or series of acts necessary to constitute a criminal withholding of pension money[77] have transpired, the crime is complete and from that date the statute of limitations begins to run against the prosecution.[78] liability incurred under such statute, unless the repealing Act shall so expressly provide, and such statute shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper action or prosecution for the enforcement of such penalty, forfeiture, or liability").

[§ 52] C. Making, or Procuring Making or Presentation, of False Affidavit Concerning Claim for Pension[81]—1. In General. Under the act of congress, which makes it an offense for any person knowingly or willfully to make or aid in making or to procure the making or presentation of any false or fraudulent affidavit concerning any claim for persion or payment thereof,[82] an intent to defraud the United States is not an element of the offense described by this statute.[83] Nor is it essential that the pension claim, concerning which the false affidavit is presented, should itself be false.[84] Where the statements made in an affidavit in support of a pension claim are true, it is not a "false or fraudulent affidavit" merely because it was not in fact sworn to on the date shown in the notice or certificate.[85]

[§ 53] 2. Indictment.[86] An indictment for making a false or fraudulent affidavit,[87] which merely charges that the affidavit was false, without a clear averment of the respects in which it was false, is insufficient.[88] The indictment for procuring the making or presentation of a false or fraudulent affidavit should state whether the false affidavit was presented by defendant or procured by him to be presented by another named;[89] and it is not sufficient to allege that defendant "did knowingly and wilfully procure the presentation . . . of a false and fraudulent paper writing, etc.;"[90] but the indictment need not charge that the affidavit was made for the purpose of defrauding the United States[91] or that the pension claim was false.[92]

[§ 54] D. Postdating Vouchers. An act of congress, providing that it shall be an offense for any person knowingly or willfully to make or cause to be made or to aid or assist in the making of, or to present or cause to be presented, any paper required as a voucher in drawing a pension, which paper bears a date subsequent to that on which it was actually signed or acknowledged by the pensioner,[93] covers the offense of making or assisting to make any false voucher concerning a claim for pension,[94] but does not cover the offense of using such a voucher,[95] which comes within the provisions of another statute providing that it shall be an offense if anyone "makes, uses, or causes to be made or used," any form of voucher for the purpose of obtaining the payment of a false claim against the United States.[96]

[§ 55] E. Making False Certificate to Vouchers[97]—1. In General. The act of congress making it a criminal offense to make a false certificate to pension claim papers[98] is violated by administering the oath immediately before the taking down of the statement thereunder,[99] equally with administering it after taking down such statement.[1]

[§ 56] 2. Indictment.[2] An indictment for taking a false oath to enable another to obtain payment of a false pension claim under a former pension statute,[3] which described the offense in the very words of the statute, was not vitiated by a conclusion which incorrectly denominates the offense;[4] and, the offense being otherwise fully and correctly stated, the indictment was not vitiated by the conclusion "and so the jurors say . . . that the party did commit wilful and corrupt perjury,"[5] although the offense is technically perjury.[6]

[§ 57] F. Evidence. General rules relating to the relevancy, materiality, and competency,[7] and the weight and sufficiency,[8] of evidence, and as to judicial notice,[9] apply in prosecutions for violation of pension laws.

89. Miller v. U. S., 136 Fed. 581, 69 CCA 355.

[a] Reason assigned is that the procuring or the making of a false affidavit by another is one offense, and the procuring or the presentation of a false affidavit is still another offense. "The indictment should charge whether the false affidavit was presented by himself or procured by him to be presented by another named. The indictment fails to declare the agency through which the presentation of the false affidavit was procured by the accused. How, then, can it be said that the offense is so stated that the accused can be fully apprised of the charge which he is to meet? He is not informed by the indictment of the manner of presentation, or the name of the person claimed by the prosecution to have been his agent in the presentation of the false affidavit, and would be obliged to go to trial without opportunity of meeting the testimony of any one of several persons whom the prosecution might then produce as the agent of the accused in such presentation. This is not that certainty in the charge of an offense which the law requires." Miller v. U. S., 136 Fed. 581, 582, 69 CCA 355.

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE

[§ 1] A pent road is a road shut up or closed at its terminal points.[1] And all pent roads are public highways,[2] although not open highways.[3]

II. WHAT MAY BE TERMINI

[§ 2] A pent road laid out by selectmen may terminate at the farm line of a person for whose special convenience it is laid out, instead of being extended to his buildings.[4] Pent roads are frequently laid only to the lands of persons to be especially accommodated thereby while they construct connecting ways across their own land and thus secure the needed outlets;[5] and an objection that the public can have no beneficial use of the way which leads to nowhere from the highway with which it intersects but only to the farm line is untenable.[6]

III. ESTABLISHMENT

[§ 3] A. Power To Establish. No power to establish a pent road exists in the absence of statutory authority therefor.[7]

Selectmen. In Vermont the power is conferred by statute on the selectmen of towns to establish pent roads.[8]

8. Warren v. Bunnell, 11 Vt. 600.
[a] Road for winter use.—Selectmen can lay out a pent road for winter use over the land of one person

County court can, on appeal from the selectmen, establish a pent road,[9] the jurisdiction conferred on it by statute being substantially that of an appellate tribunal from the decision of the selectmen[10] and confined to the identical matter which the selectmen have acted upon.[11] The proceedings in the county court are merely a continuation of the proceedings commenced before the selectmen.[12]

[§ 4] B. Proceedings for Establishment. The selectmen may act without petition, or upon an improper one, and have their action good, because their action is the vital thing, however induced.[13] Accordingly, the fact that one of the petitioners was not a freeholder does not affect the validity of the action of selectmen in establishing the road.[14]

Notice. One who appears before selectmen and objects to any action by them on an application for the establishment of a pent road, but does not object for want of sufficient notice of the application, must be deemed to have waived that objection.[15] No notice or application to the mortgagee of the land through which the road, if established, will pass is necessary where he has a statutory remedy which is ample for the enforcement of his rights.[16]

Order. It is not essential that permission to inclose the land with gates or bars shall be included in the order establishing the road,[17] and the omission to give such permission in the order does not change the character of the road from that of a pent road to that of a public highway.[18]

Appeal to, and from, county court. While as already shown the jurisdiction of the county court over proceedings to establish a pent road is substantially that of an appellate tribunal from the decision of the selectmen,[19] the appeal is brought to the county court by petition and not by having it allowed and certified by the selectmen.[20] The judgment of the county court establishing a pent road will be sustained on appeal unless substantial injustice has been done, or unless the county court upon the facts stated could not in law have rendered the judgment it did.[21] Where it does not affirmatively appear from the record what kind of highway was established by the county court, the appellate court will not presume that it was an open highway which could not be legally established of less width than three rods, but will presume that the county court established by its order a pent road which might be legally established of the width of two rods.[22]

Opening of road. The opening of a pent road, under the statute, is not a mere taking down of obstructions to travel, but the road is deemed to be opened when the certificate of the opening of the road, signed by the selectmen, has been filed in the town clerk's office.[23]

IV. DAMAGES TO LANDOWNERS

[§ 5] When a pent road has been opened in the manner prescribed by statute, the damages occasioned thereby may be recovered by the owner of the land over which the road passes.[24] And it seems that the landowner can claim damages of the town, since pent roads are regarded as highways.[25]

V. MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR

[§ 6] Towns are bound to keep pent roads in repair, that is, in reasonable repair, taking into consideration their character and importance, and are liable for injuries arising from their not being in such a state of repair.[26]

VI. GATES AND BARS

[§ 7] A. In General. The power to establish a pent road implies the power to fix the place where gates and bars may be erected.[27] If the tribunal establishing the road fails to fix the points where inclosures may be made, the landowner has the right to erect gates and bars for the protection of his crops, if they do not interfere with the reasonable use of such road as a pent road,[28] or with any contract he may be under with any other person to keep his land open and uninclosed.[29]

Cost of erection and maintenance of gates. Statutes authorizing pent roads sometimes impose the duty of the erection and maintenance of such gates on the person at whose instance and for whose benefit the road is established.[30]

[§ 8] B. Penalty[31] for Removing. The right to recover the penalty given by statute against removing gates or bars across pent roads is not affected by the fact that no copy of the record of the county court establishing the road was recorded in the county clerk's office,[32] nor is the right lost by neglecting for a period of fifteen years to maintain a gate.[33]

Form of action. The penalty given by the statute against removing gates or bars across a pent road may be recovered in an action of debt.[34]

[a] Reason is that the statute contemplates that the selectmen may give such permission in writing to inclose the road for such part of the year as they deem advisable, and make alterations therein at any time, as the convenience and necessity of the landowner may require, so far as it does not interfere with the reasonable use of the road for the purpose for which it was laid. I. DEFINITIONS AND TERMINOLOGY

[§ 1] Peonage is a status or condition of compulsory[1] service based upon the indebtedness of the peon to his master.[2]

[a] Voluntary or involuntary peonage.—"Peonage is sometimes classified as voluntary or involuntary, but this implies simply a difference in the mode of origin, but none in the character of the servitude. The one exists where the debtor voluntarily contracts to enter the service of his creditor. The other is forced upon the debtor by some provision of law. But peonage, however created, is compulsory service, involuntary servitude." U. S. v. Reynolds, 235 U. S. 133, 144, 35 SCt 86, 59 L. ed. 162.

[b] Distinguished from voluntary service in payment of debt.—"A clear distinction exists between peonage and the voluntary performance of labor or rendering of services in payment of a debt. In the latter case the debtor, though contracting to pay his indebtedness by labor or service, and subject like any other contractor to an action for damages for breach of that contract, can elect at any time to break it, and no law or force compels performance or a continuance of the service." Peonage Cases, 136 Fed. 707, 708. (2) "The exercise of dominion over their persons and liberties by the master, or employer, or creditor until the debt is paid.[3]

"'Condition of peonage' means the actual status, physical and moral, with the inevitable incidents to which the employé, servant, or debtor was reduced under that system, when held to involuntary performance or liquidation of his obligation." [4]

"Peonism" is the state or condition of a peon.[5]

II. HISTORY AND ESSENTIALS

[§ 2] The peonage system was prevalent in the Spanish American colonies, including Mexico, from which we derived it when we acquired the territory of New Mexico as the result of the Mexican War.[6]

As a contract relation. The condition of peonage arose from contract. The peon, male or female, agreed with the master upon the nature of the service, the length of its duration, and the compensation to be paid. The peon then became bound to the master, according to the laws of New Mexico, "for an indebtedness founded upon an advancement in consideration of service." [7] In the earlier stages of the institution there, the person agreeing to perform service could put an end to the relation by paying at any time whatever he owed to the employer.[8] If the peon wished to change masters or service, he might find a new employer who would advance enough to pay the peon's debts to his then master, and the peon would then become bound in the new employer's service. So also the master could sell the service of the peon, for the term, to anyone who would pay his debts and assume the duties and obligations of the master. Under later laws the party could not abandon the contract except by mutual consent or "by some sufficient motive given by one party to another, such as having grievously injured him, or where the master kept the accounts in an ambiguous manner, so that the servant could not understand them." In these cases the contract could be rescinded by paying the amount due by one party to the other. If no such motive should be proved, the contract must be complied with, and the judge or court would order it carried into effect by imposing upon the party failing to comply with the contract, and who should persevere in doing so, that he should indemnify the other party for the injury resulting therefrom; and all resistance was punished by a fine or imprisonment, as the gravity of the circumstances and resistance might require. If the servant refused to comply, and owed any money to the master, and he refused and could not pay it, the court would compel him to pay the principal and interest to the other, and might order the sheriff to contract the services of the peon to the highest bidder.[9]

As a form of slavery. While peonage may be regarded as a form of slavery,[10] it was not chattel slavery [11] as that institution formerly existed in this country. The peon was not a slave; he was a freeman with political, as well as civil, rights.[12] He entered into the relation from choice, for a definite period, as the result of mutual contract.[13] The relation was not confined to any race.[14]

Child of a peon did not become a peon, nor could the father contract away the services of his minor child except in rare cases.[15]

III. CONSTITUTIONAL AND LEGISLATIVE PROHIBITIONS

[§ 3] A. In General. Peonage as it formerly existed [16] was wholly out of keeping with the spirit of the Thirteenth Amendment to the United States creditor, to compel the discharge of the obligation, by service or labor, against the will of the person performing the service." Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671, 679.

[quot In re Lewis, 114 Fed. 963, 967].

[b] In New Mexico peons, strictly speaking, were a class of servants bound to personal service for the payment of debts due their masters, but there seems to have been no law regulating their rights and duties under that specific denomination, and the term "peon" was there used as synonymous with "servant." Jaremillo v. Romero, 1 N. M. 190.

[b] System of peonage.—"Condition of peonage" does not import a system of peonage. A "general condition of peonage" might be synonymous with a "general system of peonage," but a citizen held and worked by lawless methods against his will for the purpose of compelling him in this manner to discharge a real or alleged obligation is, in contemplation of law, held in a condition of peonage. "The powers of justices of the peace, who succeeded to most of the jurisdiction of the alcaldes in the administration of the law [in New Mexico], were not clearly defined, and left very much to their discretion as to the return of persons to service, and the mode and quantum of judicial power which could be exercised to compel the service. There was often 'unscrupulous disregard' as to 'the legal rights of the unfortunate, the peon, and the feeble, when contesting with the wealthy and influential.' The improvidence and the needs of laborers and servants, the greed of employers, and the exercise, often corrupt, of almost irresponsible power of local magistrates, resulted in citizens becoming bound, in constantly increasing numbers and length of constitution,[17] and since, notwithstanding the courts after the passage of the amendment released peons on writs of habeas corpus, little headway was made against the evil,[18] congress, in order not only to destroy the system as it existed in New Mexico, but to prevent in the future "in any Territory or State" the reappearance or reëstablishment of the evil conditions, enacted the statute of March 2, 1867[19] and of March 4, 1909[20] for that purpose, the constitutionality of which has been upheld,[21] and state statutes in conflict therewith have been declared invalid.[22]

[§ 4] B. Rules of Construction.[23] The meaning of the terms in the peonage statute must be sought in the light of the history of the institution in New Mexico, and the design of congress interpreted in the light of the evil condition that system developed, which the statute declared should not thereafter exist in any state or territory,[24] and the statute, like other statutes imposing penalties for the invasion of the rights of the citizen in order to protect him in his liberty and happiness, is not to be construed with the same strictness or on the same footing as those which regulate or restrain the exercise of a natural right or forbid the doing of things not intrinsically wrong.[25]

[§ 5] C. In What Territory Operative. The statute is not limited to the territories or other parts of the strictly national domain, but is operative in the states, and wherever the sovereignty of the United States extends.[26]

[§ 6] D. Enumeration of Offenses Denounced by Statute. By the express provisions of the statute[27] the offense may consist of holding or causing to be held,[28] of arresting or causing to be arrested,[29] or of returning or causing to be returned[30] any person to a condition of peonage.

[§ 7] E. Elements of Offense—1. Indebtedness of Servant to Master. Since the basal fact on which peonage rests is a debt due from the peon to his master,[31] a debt from the servant to the master is an indispensable element of the offenses denounced by the statute,[32] although the requirements of the statute will be satisfied whether the debt is real or pretended.[33] So the amount of the debt is immaterial,[34] and it is likewise immaterial whether the contract was made in consideration of a preëxisting indebtedness or for a loan made at the time the contract is made.[35]

An obligation to work cannot be reasonably con-service, to compulsory 'service or labor' to coerce payment of debt or compel the performance of real or pretended obligations of personal service. The evils of the system not only degraded those who were subjected to the system, but exercised a baleful influence upon all other classes, which in innumerable ways fought against the industrial prosperity and moral advancement of the people among whom the 'system' was enforced." Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671, 674.

17. U. S. Const. Amendm. XIII (which forbids involuntary servitude except upon conviction of crime).

"While negro slavery alone was in the mind of the Congress which proposed the thirteenth article, it forbids any other kind of slavery, now or hereafter. If Mexican peonage or the Chinese coolie labor system shall develop slavery of the Mexican or Chinese race within our territory, this amendment may safely be trusted to make it void." Peons had become so degraded that in many instances they voluntarily returned to the compulsory service, being content to give control over their persons and freedom to masters who, in return, would feed and clothe them and their families. Masters, in many instances, resented the new order of things, 'which deprived them of proper control of their labor,' and exercised their old authority in spite of the new amendment, which was not then enforceable by criminal penalty. Officers of the army, particularly in the case of Indians, used the forces of the United States to hold or return them to the system of compulsory labor or service, in discharge of their contracts, debts, or obligations").

strued to mean a debt within the statute.[36]

[§ 8] 2. Condition of Peonage—a. Necessity. By the express terms of the statute[37] a "condition of peonage" is an indispensable element of any of the offenses therein enumerated,[38] and it has accordingly been held that inasmuch as a "return" implies the prior existence of some state or condition,[39] there can be no conviction of returning another to a state of peonage unless the person so returned had actually been in a state of peonage prior to the alleged act of returning him thereto.[40]

[§ 9] b. Mode of Creation—(1) In General. However created, peonage is denounced and prohibited by the statutes, the mode of its creation being immaterial.[41] The statutes forbid slavery and involuntary servitude, however attempted, whether created by contract,[42] by force, intimidation, or coercion,[43] by municipal ordinances or state law,[44] or by local custom[45] or usage[46] creating a condition of peonage, or in violation, or without the sanction, of law,[47] and in whatever form or however named.[48]

[§ 10] (2) Intent or Scienter. In order to constitute the offense of holding one in peonage it is not necessary that defendant shall have acted corruptly.[49] However, a guilty knowledge of the unlawful purpose of an arrest within the contemplation of the statute is essential to the making out of the crime against the arresting officer.[50]

[§ 11] F. Particular Acts Constituting Offenses and Persons Liable. Within the principles heretofore enunciated[51] in the notes will be found decisions illustrative of the acts sufficient to constitute the offense denounced by the statute and to show what persons are liable therefor.[52]

"The full intent of the constitutional provision could be defeated with obvious facility if, through the guise of contracts under which advances had been made, debtors could be held to compulsory service. It is the compulsion of the service that the statute inhibits, for when that occurs the condition of servitude is created, which would be not less involuntary because of the original agreement to work out the indebtedness. The contract exposes the debtor to liability for the loss due to the breach, but not to enforced labor." Bailey v. Alabama, supra.

[a] Voluntary or involuntary act of servant.—It is immaterial whether the contract, whereby the laborer is to work out an indebtedness due from him to the employer, is entered into voluntarily or not. "The fact even that the laborer entered into that contract voluntarily and with full knowledge of the conditions of his employment is no excuse, for the law says that no person shall enter into such a contract, and, if he does, it shall be null and void." [a] What constitutes force, intimidation, or coercion (1) such as, if effective, will render the service involuntary and create a condition of peonage within the meaning of the statute, is always a question of fact and each case must depend upon its own circumstances. U. S. v. Clement, 171 Fed. 974. (2) But in determining this question, the character and condition of life of the two parties (U. S. v. Clement, supra), (3) the relative inferiority or inequality between the persons contracting to perform the service and the persons exercising the force or influence to compel its performance (Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671), must always be taken into consideration.

52. See cases infra this note.

[a] Acts constituting peonage.—(1) A person who falsely pretends to another that he is accused of crime, and offers his good offices to prevent his conviction if he will pay a sum of money, thereby to satisfy the prosecutor, and thus induces such party to sign a contract obligating himself to work to reimburse the amount paid out or pretended to be paid out for this purpose, and to submit to restraint and deprivation of his liberty while he is performing the contract, is guilty of holding such person, or causing him to be held, to a condition of peonage, whenever such person, having so entered on performance of the contract, desires to leave it, but is compelled to remain and perform it by threats or punishment, subduing his freedom of will. Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671, 672. (2) A person who hires another or induces him to sign a contract by which he agrees during the term to be imprisoned or kept under guard, and under cover of such agreement afterward holds the party to the performance of the contract by threats or punishment or undue influence, subduing his free will, when he desires to abandon the service, is guilty of holding such person to "a condition of peonage." Peonage Cases, supra. (3) If a person carries another before a magistrate informing him that he is accused of crime, and the magistrate induces accused, being of weak mind, or of little intelligence, or confiding, to believe that he is being prosecuted in the court, and that he has been sentenced to hard labor for a fine, and that the party bringing him before the court has confessed judgment for the fine, in consequence of which the person believing himself lawfully sentenced to hard labor for the fine submits to restraint, and his will is subdued by reason of the fraud and the official character of the person before whom he is brought, because he believes himself to be a convict and restrained by the power which the law gives to a hirer over convicts, and he enters upon the service and works under the contract against his will, the persons so concerned are guilty of causing accused to be held in a condition of peonage, although no warrant issued, no offense in fact was charged, no judgment was rendered, and the person who carried him before the magistrate was only a private citizen. Peonage Cases, supra. (4) If a master desiring to have a servant returned to him to work out a debt causes such servant to be arrested, and after incarceration the master procures the servant's release on his promise to return to his master's employment to continue to work out a debt, the master is guilty of peonage, provided the servant was charged with the crime for the purpose of procuring his arrest and incarceration, and to enable the master to extort from the servant a promise to return and work out the debt. In re Peonage Charge, 138 Fed. 686.

[b] Judicial officers.—(1) A magistrate or other judicial officer is not criminally liable for an error of judgment or for any act honestly performed under an unconstitutional law (Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671), (2) but where he corruptly exercises his functions in order that a citizen may be convicted unlawfully, and sentenced, so that a particular person with whom he has an understanding, express or implied, by becoming surety on a confession of judgment may get the custody of the convict or make a profit out of a contract to be made between the convict and his surety in consequence of which the convict is restrained of his liberty and put to hard labor, such magistrate cannot escape criminal liability to the United States for the conspiracy and its natural and designed results in the holding of a citizen to a condition of peonage, because of the official character of his acts (Peonage Cases, supra). (3) And a magistrate cannot be convicted of returning a person to a condition of peonage where the person so returned had not actually been in a state of peonage prior to the alleged act of returning him thereto. Taylor v. U. S., 244 Fed. 321, 156 CCA 607.

[§ 12] G. Prosecution—1. Jurisdiction. A federal court may entertain a prosecution for violation of the statute denouncing peonage, although a prosecution of the same acts under the name of kidnapping and false imprisonment might be held in the state courts.[53]

[§ 13] 2. Indictment, Evidence, and Trial. General rules governing the requisites and sufficiency of indictments,[54] the admissibility,[55] weight and sufficiency of evidence,[56] and trial[57] apply in prosecutions for offenses denounced by the peonage statutes.

PEONIA. In Spanish law, a portion of land which was formerly given to a simple soldier on the conquest of a country. It is now a quantity of land of different size in different provinces. In the Spanish possessions in America it measured fifty feet front and one hundred feet deep.[1]

PEOPLE.[2] A word of varied significance,[3] subject to many different meanings,[4] depending upon the connection in which it is used[5] and the subject matter to which it relates,[6] and sometimes employed in a broad[7] and comprehensive[8] sense as referring to persons generally, an indefinite number of men and women, folks, population, or part of population.[9]

Davis v. U. S., supra.

[d] Sureties for payment of fine and costs.—(1) Where a person charged with crime has, after confession, been sentenced to pay a fine and costs and then been released on the payment of a fine by a surety with whom he has made an agreement to work continuously for a specified period for the specified amount so paid for the fine and costs, and he is liable to separate punishment if he fails to carry out the contract, he is in reality working for a debt which he owes the surety, the labor is performed under such coercion as to become a compulsory service for the discharge of a debt, and the relationship between him and the surety is that of peonage and falls within the prohibition of the Thirteenth Amendment and the laws enacted to enforce it. U. S. v. Reynolds, 235 U. S. 133, 35 SCt 86, 59 L. ed. 162 [rev 213 Fed. 352, and overr U. S. v. Broughton, 213 Fed. 345]. (2) Under a statute of Alabama which permits a person convicted of crime to sign a contract in open court, with the written approval of the judge, by which he submits himself to servitude to his surety, on confession of judgment by the latter for the fine and costs, until such fine and costs have been reimbursed by his labor, the provisions of the statute must be strictly followed, and the contract cannot be extended beyond the payment of the fine and costs, nor can it be transferred without the consent of the convict. If he is held thereunder against his will and by force or threats after the fine and costs have been paid, or by another to whom the contract has been transferred without his consent, the person so restraining him is guilty of holding him to a condition of peonage. Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671. (3) Although one may have confessed judgment for another on his conviction, the surety is not entitled on that account to detain him in custody against his will, as his bail would be before trial, unless the surety has complied with the statutes of the state, and made written contract in open court, approved by the judge in writing. This is a safeguard which the state exacts to prevent abuse and oppression when the surety intends to hold his principal to involuntary service to reimburse him for the payment of the fine and costs. As such an agreement involves personal trust and confidence on the part of the convict in the selection of a keeper, his surety has no authority, without his consent, to transfer the contract and custody of the convict to some other person, who repays to the surety the fine and costs, and enforces the performance of the service. If there is no written contract approved by the court, or if it is transferred without the consent of the convict, the convict cannot be held against his will to perform service to repay his fine and costs. If one holds another convicted of a misdemeanor, against his will, because he has confessed judgment for the fine and costs, without obtaining a written contract in open court, approval in writing by the judge, or holds him against his will, after the fine and costs have been worked out, for advances upon a further term of service, or prevents his leaving by force or threats as above defined, such person is guilty of holding the person in a condition of peonage. Peonage Cases, supra.

54. See Indictments and Informations §§ 170–311.

[a] Indictment held sufficient.—An indictment charging that defendant willfully and knowingly held three persons to a condition of peonage, that is to say, defendant kept and held them, by threats and putting them in fear, against their wills to perform labor to work out debts claimed to be due defendant, is in due form and sufficient in law. [a] Admissibility.—(1) Evidence that the principal defendant procured the arrest of some of the persons so held on petty charges, and at a hearing before the county judge induced pleas of guilty, paid costs assessed against them, and took them away, is admissible against all defendants, as proving a basal fact of indebtedness essential to peonage. Davis v. U. S., 12 F. (2d) 253. (2) On an indictment for returning certain persons to a condition of peonage, defendant may show that such persons had never been in a condition of peonage. Clyatt v. U. S., 197 U. S. 207, 25 SCt 429, 49 L. ed. 726.

56. See Criminal Law § 1559 et seq.

[a] Weight and sufficiency.—Evidence of the prosecuting witness, if believed by the jury, may be sufficient to show that defendant had forced her to work out a debt by threats and fear. Bernal v. [a] As meaning "the whole and not a fraction of the people."—Peo. v. Draper, 15 N. Y. 532, 566.

[b] "The word 'people,' when not used as the equivalent of state or nation, must apply to a body of persons less than a state or nation, and this meaning would be satisfied by considering it as applicable to any consolidated political body." The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 1, 58, 17 SCt 495, 41 L. ed. 897.

[c] "Subjects," "people," and "inhabitants" may be used indiscriminately as synonymous. The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 227, 246, 4 L. ed. 226 [quot Loi Hoa v. Nagle, 13 F. (2d) 80, 81].

[d] "People . . . of that country".—Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 410, 446, 9 L. ed. 1137.

[e] "People of the county."—St. Louis County Ct. v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175, 201; Jackson v. Cory, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 385, 388.

[f] "People of a town" may be equivalent to the "inhabitants of the town." Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 683, 693, 26 L. ed. 526.

[g] "'People of Nebraska' . . . and the 'inhabitants' . . . are the free white male inhabitants above the age of twenty-one years, actual residents of the territory, citizens of the United States, and those who have declared on oath their intention to become such, and shall have taken an oath to support the constitution of the United States." State v. Boyd, 31 Nebr. 682, 723, 48 NW 739, 51 NW 602.

14. The Three Friends, 166 U. S. 1, 62, 17 SCt 495, 41 L. ed. 897; Nesbitt v. Lushington, 4 T. R. 783, 787, 100 Reprint 1300.

[a] "The words 'people of the United States' and 'citizens' are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold the power and conduct the Government through their representatives. They are what we familiarly call the 'sovereign people,' and every citizen is one of this people, and a constituent member of this sovereignty." Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 404, 15 L. ed. 691 [quot Boyd v. Nebraska, 143 U. S. 135, 159, 12 SCt 375, 36 L. ed. 103]. "Citizen" see Citizens § 1.

PERIOD. A measuring term,[9] compound of two Greek words, the first meaning "round, about," the other "a way,"[10] which, although having its etymological meaning,[11] also has a distinctive signification according to the subject in connection with which it may be used.[12] It has been defined as a stated and recurring interval of time;[13] a portion of time as limited and determined by some recurring phenomenon;[14] more generally, an interval of time specified or left indefinite;[15] also, a division of time in which something is completed.[16] The word may mean an indefinite time,[17] as well as a time specified.[18] It may be used to mean a continuous period of time,[19] and it is said that the general definition of the word, in reference to time, is to refer to a continuous period.[20] But the term may be used as not to mean a continuous cycle of time without intervention.[21]

tion,"[32] "period of imprisonment,"[33] "period of maintenance,"[34] "period of probation,"[35] "periods of limitation;"[36] also, "pre-war period."[37]

PERIODICAL. As an adjective. Characterized by periods; recurring more or less regularly after a certain period of time.[38]

As a noun.[39] A magazine or other publication which appears at stated or regular intervals;[40] a publication issued at regular intervals in successive numbers or parts, each of which (properly) contains matter on a variety of topics and no one of which is contemplated as forming a book of itself.[41]

PERIODICALLY.[42] At stated or regularly recurring intervals.[43]

PERIODICAL OVERFLOW.[44]

PERIODIC TENANCY.[45] In cases where it arises merely as an inference from the conduct of the parties, nothing more than the name of a modified form of an estate at will, namely, one which, either by force of judicial decision or statute or both, cannot be terminated by either party without the giving of a notice of a certain duration.[46]

PERIPHERY. Generally, the outside or superficial part of a body.[47] When applied to a sphere, the whole of the exterior surface.[48] When applied to a disk, unless a larger meaning is clearly implied, the outer edge of the disk.[49]

PERISHABLE.[50] Liable to deteriorate from keeping;[51] liable to perish;[52] mortal;[53] subject to destruction or decay;[54] subject to speedy decay;[55] subject to speedy and natural decay;[56] especially liable to decay speedily;[57] that which, from its nature, decays in a short space of time, without reference to the care it receives.[58] The term may embrace property liable to material depreciation in value from other causes than decay;[59] portation commences, or it would be an unmeaning and useless word in its connection in the statute").

41. Century D. [quot Houghton v. Payne, 194 U. S. 88, 97, 24 SCt 590, 48 L. ed. 888 ("A periodical, as ordinarily understood, is a publication appearing at stated intervals, each number of which contains a variety of original articles by different authors, devoted either to general literature of some special branch of learning or to a special class of subjects. Ordinarily each number is incomplete in itself, and indicates a relation with prior or subsequent numbers of the same series. It implies a continuity of literary character, a connection between the different numbers of the series in the nature of the articles appearing in them, whether they be successive chapters of the same story or novel or essays upon subjects pertaining to general literature. If, for instance, one number were devoted to law, another to medicine, another to religion, another to music, another to painting, etc., the publication could not be considered as a periodical, as there is no connection between the subjects and no literary continuity. It could scarcely be supposed that ordinary readers would subscribe to a publication devoted to such an extensive range of subjects")].

[a] "The noun periodical, according to the nice shade of meaning given to it by popular speech, conveys at least a suggestion if not a promise of matter on a variety of topics, and certainly implies that no single number is contemplated as forming a book of itself." Smith v. Hitchcock, 226 U. S. 53, 58, 33 SCt 6, 57 L. ed. 109.

[b] A book is readily distinguishable from a periodical, not only because it usually has a more substantial binding (although this is by no means essential), but because of the fact that it ordinarily contains a story, essay, or poem, or a collection of such, by the same author, although even this is by no means universal, as books frequently contain articles by different authors. Books are not often issued periodically, and, if so, their periodicity is not an element of their character. Houghton v. Payne, 194 U. S. 88, 97, 98, 24 SCt 590, 48 L. ed. 888. "Book" see 9 C. I. DEFINITIONS AND DISTINCTIONS

[By Douglas Robinson Gray]

[§ 1] A. Perjury[1]—1. At Common Law. By the common law perjury is the willful and corrupt taking of a false oath, lawfully administered in a judicial proceeding or the course of justice in regard to a matter material to the issue or point of inquiry.[2] False swearing is a distinct offense at common law.[3]

[§ 2] 2. Statutory Provisions. "Perjury" is often defined in the statutes,[4] some of which have been judicially declared to be merely codifications of the common law.[5] Where the statute prescribes a pun-

5. Miller v. State, 15 Fla. 577; Peo. v. Martin, 77 App. Div. 396, 79 NYS 340 [aff 175 N. Y. 315, 67 NE 589, 96 AmSR 628] (Massachusetts statute).

[a] In Louisiana (1) the common and not the civil law controls as to criminal jurisprudence in the absence of statutory modification. Sealy v. Dussel, 157 La. 485, 102 S 581. (2) An act providing "that the debtor at the time of such examination shall be sworn to tell the truth in the same manner as a witness in the trial of civil cases under existing laws, and should he, during the course of the examination, knowingly testify falsely upon any material point, this shall constitute the crime of perjury, and he shall be subject to the penalties provided under the law with reference to that offense" does not amend the general definition of perjury at common law. Sealy v. Dussel, supra. (3) "The Legislature in this State has extended the crime to wilful false swearing to any deposition or affidavit taken or made pursuant to the laws of the state." State v. Matlock, 48 La. Ann. 663, 665, 19 S 669.

[b] In Washington, under statute (1) first degree perjury consists in a false statement in any action, proceeding, hearing, inquiry, or investigation in which an oath may lawfully be administered. State v. Wilson, 83 Wash. 419, 145 P 455; State v. Dallagiovanna, 69 Wash. 84, 124 P 209, 40 LRANS 249. (2) Second degree perjury consists in a false statement made under oath in extrajudicial proceedings and investigations, and those held by quasi-judicial boards, commissions, and committees where a false oath could not be first degree perjury because it does not operate as an obstruction of justice in regular judicial proceedings. State v. Wilson, supra. (3) First and second degree perjury are distinct offenses, the first being true perjury as ordinarily defined in other jurisdictions whereas the second is in the nature of "false swearing" as such crime is ordinarily defined in other states. State v. Wilson, supra. (4) Prior to the statute creating degrees of perjury it was said that common-law perjury and perjury as defined by the Washington statute are substantially, if not identically, the same. State v. Eaid, 55 Wash. 302, 104 P 275, 33 LRANS 946 (holding a common-law indictment good under the statute). (5) The substantial identity of the common-law and statutory offenses is apparent with respect to the guilty knowledge of falsity or its equivalent reckless disregard for truth. State v. Eaid, supra. (6) The word "swear" in Remington & B. Code § 2353, defining perjury in the second degree, means to ishment for perjury without defining the offense,[6] the common-law definition[7] remains in effect.[8] Many statutes define the term by enumerating the acts which shall constitute commission of the crime, including acts not within the common-law definition.[9] Under varying statutory provisions[10] it has been held that the intent of the legislature was to enlarge the scope of the common-law crime of perjury by eliminating the requirement of materiality of the statement,[11] or the requirement that it be made in a judicial proceeding.[12] Some statutes[13] eliminate both the requirement of materiality and that of a judicial proceeding,[14] and courts construing such statutes have indicated that such is their effect.[15] Other statutes eliminate the requirement of a judicial proceeding but preserve that of materiality,[16] the courts construing such statutes as making perjury the willful and corrupt assertion of a falsehood, under oath or affirmation administered by authority of law, in a material matter, the offense being enlarged and made to extend to other false oaths than those taken in the course of judicial proceedings.[17] A third type of statute[18] has been construed as preserving the requirement of a judicial proceeding but eliminating the requirement of materiality.[19] False swearing is a distinct statutory offense.[20]

[§ 3] B. False Swearing[21]—1. In General. "False swearing" has been defined as swearing to what deponent knows to be untrue,[22] corruptly[23] and intentionally,[24] in a manner that is morally and willfully false as distinguished from being merely mistaken.[25] In its common or popular meaning "false swearing" is synonymous with "perjury."[26] But in the technical or legal meaning of the term "false swearing" is something distinct from "perjury."[27]

Falso testimonio, under Spanish law, corresponds to false swearing under English law.[28]

"Foreswearing" is synonymous with "false swearing,"[29] but ordinarily[30] distinct from "perjury."[31]

[a] In Vermont a section of a statute prescribing a punishment for perjury without defining it, and another section defining perjury and referring to the first section for the punishment thereof have been construed as (1) leaving in effect the common-law definition of perjury so far as the first section is concerned (State v. Smith, 63 Vt. 201, 22 A 604); and (2) making that perjury which was not perjury at common law, so far as the second section is concerned (State v. Rowell, 70 Vt. 405, 408, 41 A 430 ["Our statute § 5080, enlarges the common law definition and extends the crime to other matters than those involved in proceedings in courts of justice, as at common law and by V. S. § 5079, and provides that, 'A person of whom an oath is required by law, who wilfully swears falsely in regard to any matter or thing respecting which such oath is required, shall be guilty of perjury'"]; State v. Smith, supra). (3) The intent was not to enact an exclusive definition of perjury by the second section so as to eliminate common-law perjury, but merely to add to common-law perjury a statutory perjury as set forth in said second section. This language is very broad and comprehensive, and clearly indicates the intent of the legislature to enlarge the scope of the crime of perjury, as it exists at common law, and to make any willfully false swearing in judicial proceedings perjury, regardless of the question of its materiality to the issue; that is, in effect, to make it a statutory offence." It will be observed that there is nothing in this act as to the necessity that the false swearing denounced should be material to the issue in a judicial proceeding. The only requirements are that the oath shall be required by law, administered by one authorized to do so, and that it was wilfully and knowingly false." State v. Byrd, supra.

Accordingly, when other words are added, showing that the oath spoken of was taken in a judicial court, the word forsworn, with this explanation, has been considered as importing a charge of perjury").

[a] Element of a judicial proceeding essential to perjury is not required in foreswearing. U. S. v. How-

[§ 4] 2. At Common Law. At common law false swearing is a separate and indictable offense,[32] the distinction between it and perjury lying in the fact that the false oath in perjury must be in a judicial proceeding, whereas in false swearing it need not be in such a proceeding.[33] Perjury is stubborn and corrupt, while false swearing is merely untrue.[34]

[§ 5] 3. Under Statutes. Under statutes making false swearing a specific crime,[35] it is a separate offense,[36] and a person violating a false swearing statute must be prosecuted thereunder and not under a general perjury statute.[37] Statutory false swearing differs from common-law perjury,[38] or perjury as defined under statutes declaratory of the common law,[39] in that the statement to constitute false swearing need not be taken in a judicial proceeding.[40] It differs from perjury as defined both at common law[41] and under statutes declaratory of or modifying the common-law definition,[42] in that the false statement must be material to constitute perjury but need not be material to constitute false swearing.[43] Under statutes defining both perjury and false swearing as separate offenses it has been said that a false statement in a judicial proceeding may be perjury but cannot be false swearing,[44] and that while the oath in perjury must be required by law, in false swearing it may be voluntary.[45] But under statutes defining false swearing but containing no definition of perjury[46] it has been stated that false swearing may be committed in a judicial proceeding.[47] It has been said that the gist of both statutory false swearing and perjury lies in the corrupt intent to swear falsely.[48]

Repeal. A statute defining and punishing false swearing does not impliedly repeal an earlier statute relative to perjury,[49] nor does a statute providing

(2) But in a later case false swearing is said to be "a degree . . . of perjury." Weiner v. Com., 221 Ky. 455, 458, 298 SW 1075 [overr Com. v. Hinkle, supra; Com. v. Scowden, supra] ("the common-law offense of perjury was so circumscribed that it did not reach false statements willfully made under oath except they were made in a matter judicially pending, and upon a question that was material to the issue. The statute broadened such circumscribing limitations and punished the offender if he knowingly made false statements under any of the circumstances enumerated in the statute, even though some of them were not made in proceedings 'judicially pending' or material to an issue in such pending proceedings. The manifest purpose was to punish the practice of willfully and knowingly making false statements in any and all matters upon which the witness might be sworn, or on which he was required to be sworn. It will thus be seen that facts necessary to constitute perjury always include false swearing, but the converse is not true, since false swearing in many instances does not include perjury. The two crimes therefore belong to the same class, are directed to the same vicious practice, and the statutory extension of the instances in which the offender could be punished was for the accomplishment of the same purpose as was the common-law crime of perjury; i. e., to procure the truth from one under oath, and to punish him if he knowingly and willfully falsifies. We therefore conclude that, since our opinions, supra, treat the two offenses as kindred in their nature and purpose so as to require application of the rules of common-law procedure in trials for perjury to trials for statutory crime of false swearing, and in view of the further universal pronouncement by the courts that perjury includes false swearing, the latter is a degree of the former"). that false swearing in any investigation held under such statute shall be perjury impliedly repeal an earlier and general statute as to false swearing.[50] A statute defining and prescribing a punishment for false swearing in a particular proceeding impliedly repeals a general false swearing statute in so far as the latter was applicable to the particular offense so defined and punished.[51]

Willful and corrupt false swearing may be made a distinct offense under statute.[52]

[§ 6] C. False Oath in Support of Claim against Government.[53] A United States statute providing punishment for false swearing in support of claims against the government[54] has been construed as not creating or punishing the crime of perjury but as creating a new and distinct offense.[55]

Under a state statute specifically punishing false oaths in support of a specified class of claims against the government,[56] one making a false oath in support of such claim cannot be punished for perjury,[57] but must be prosecuted under the specific statute.[58]

[§ 7] D. Falsifying Evidence. Under a statute[59] making it a felony to attempt to induce another to give false testimony, and silent as to whether such testimony must be perjury, an offense is created apart from perjury or subornation of perjury,[60] and it is not necessary that the false testimony be material where the statute does not expressly so provide.[61]

II. NATURE OF OFFENSE

[By Douglas Robinson Gray]

[§ 8] A. In General. It has been said that perjury is malum in se,[62] and an offense at common law.[63]

[§ 9] B. Felony or Misdemeanor. While perjury was regarded as a misdemeanor at common law,[64]

[a] Reason for rule.—Since false swearing and perjury are distinct offenses, a statute defining and punishing false swearing does not impliedly repeal an earlier statute punishing perjury. State v. Coleman, 117 La. 973, 42 S 471 (Acts [1906] No. 118 p 200, relating to willful, corrupt, and false swearing, and providing that whoever shall be found guilty of that offense shall be punished, etc., does not repeal Rev. St. § 857, a general statute regarding perjury).

50. Com. v. Ransdall, 153 Ky. 334, 155 SW 1117.

[a] For example, Act March 11, 1912 (L. [1912] c 18), providing that false swearing in any investigation of fires in the state by the insurance commissioner, fire marshal, or his assistants shall be perjury, does not repeal St. § 1174, punishing false swearing. Com. v. Ransdall, 153 Ky. 334, 155 SW 1117.

51. Head v. Com., 165 Ky. 603, 177 SW 731.

[a] For example, St. (1915) §§ 1174, 1175, creating the offense of false swearing, and declaring that, where any written statement is sworn to as required by law, and it is false in any material part, the person making the statement with knowledge of its falsity shall be guilty of false swearing, are, as to false swearing to reports of banks, repealed by the act of 1912, as amended in 1914, embodied in St. (1915) § 165a, creating a banking department, requiring reports from banks verified by the oath of officers, and imposing penalties for making false reports recoverable in action by the attorney-general and repealing conflicting acts. Head v. Com., 165 Ky. 603, 177 SW 721.

[b] Not a degree of false swearing.—The crime of willfully making or transmitting a false bank report, as defined by a banking statute, is not a degree of false swearing but is a separate and distinct offense. Head v. Com., 165 Ky. 603, 117 SW 731.

52. See statutory provisions.

[a] In Louisiana "Act 118 of 1906 creates, defines, and punishes the crime of willful and corrupt false swearing. Section 2 of the act defines false swearing as follows: 'Be it further enacted, etc., that whenever any person shall testify under oath to a certain state of material facts upon a subject matter under investigation by a grand jury or committing magistrate, or in an affidavit presented to a district attorney as a basis for a bill of information, for the purpose of the procurement of the indictment or commitment of, or a bill of information against, any person charged with the violation of any criminal statute of this state, and who shall subsequently testify under oath to a materially different fact or state of facts . . . to which he had first testified, as above stated, on the trial of the person so charged, shall be deemed guilty of willful and corrupt false swearing.'" S.) 238, 254, 9 L. ed. 113 (holding also that one making a cross affidavit before a justice of the peace of the state, in order to establish a claim against the United States, is indictable under the act of congress passed March 1, 1823, to prevent false swearing touching public money, although such affidavit was not expressly authorized by an act of congress, but allowed by the secretary of the treasury to be made before a justice of the peace).

"That act does not create or punish the crime of perjury, technically considered; but it creates a new and substantive offence of false swearing, and punishes it in the same manner as perjury. The oath, therefore, need not be administered in a judicial proceeding, or in a case of which the state magistrate, under the state laws, had judicial jurisdiction, so as to make the false swearing perjury. It would be sufficient, that it might be lawfully administered by the magistrate, and was not in violation of his official duty." U. S. v. Bailey, supra.

[a] "Perjury," in Pension Act (1820) c 51 § 2, declaring that any person who shall swear falsely in the premises and be thereof convicted shall suffer as for willful and corrupt perjury, does not mean the technical offense of perjury, but merely refers to it for the purpose of affixing the same punishment as for technical perjury. III. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE

[By Douglas Robinson Gray]

[§ 10] A. In General. Subject to common-law and statutory differences heretofore explained,[67] it may be stated generally that the elements of perjury are the statement,[68] its falsity[69] and materiality;[70] the oath, its authorization[71] and administration;[72] the matter or proceeding in which the statement and oath occur, which must be such as to come within the common-law or statutory definition of the offense;[73] and the criminal intent of deponent.[74] But neither the specific motive of accused[75] nor the prejudice resulting to another from the false statement[76] is an essential element of the crime. Reference to these elements, in whole or in part, frequently has been made by the courts as being essential to the offense both at common law[77] and under the statutes.[78]

False swearing.[79] The essential elements of false swearing, under statute,[80] have been said to consist in (1) a willful false oath (2) upon a matter as to which a party could legally be sworn, (3) administered by a person legally authorized to administer oaths.[81]

[§ 11] B. Particular Elements—1. Statement[82]—a. In General. Obviously, from the very nature of the definition of the crime,[83] some statement made or testimony given, under oath[84] and false,[85] is a necessary ingredient of perjury.[86] Several false statements made in the same proceeding constitute but one perjury.[87]

[§ 12] b. Fact or Opinion—(1) In General. To constitute perjury or false swearing[88] the false statement must be one of fact, and not of opinion.[89] But in so far as the existence or nonexistence of an opinion or belief is in itself a material matter of fact, a false statement of opinion or belief may constitute the offense.[90]

An honest but erroneous expression of opinion is not perjury.[91]

[§ 13] (2) Conclusions of Law.[92] Ordinarily a statement as to the legal effect of certain facts, or mere conclusion of law, cannot constitute perjury.[93] Thus a misconception or mistake in swearing to the construction of a written instrument is not sufficient to warrant a conviction of perjury.[94] Whether a statement is one of fact or law will depend upon the nature of the statement and the circumstances of the case.[95] But a false statement of the opinion of the witness as to the validity of a contract may be perjury.[96]

While an expert's opinion as to law may be perjury if intentionally false,[97] his honest but erroneous opinion as to law is not perjury.[98]

[§ 14] (3) Memory. A statement that one does not remember certain facts, when he really does remember them, may be perjury.[99] Conversely, it would seem that swearing one remembers something, when in fact he has no recollection of it, is also perjury.[1]

I discover no ground of objection to this portion of the charge. Clearly, it was an affirmative fact in giving notice—an act done by the party, which he swore to positively; and he could not shield himself from a charge of perjury, established by satisfactory evidence, by claiming a want of memory. His positive affirmation that he gave notice would not be in accordance with the truth, if he simply did not recollect. a basis for impeachment of the witness,[6] a false answer thereto may constitute perjury.[7] An indirect answer to a question may constitute perjury.[8]

[§ 17] e. Official Oaths.[9] In accordance with the general rule that promissory statements cannot serve as the basis for a charge of perjury,[10] it is ordinarily held that an official oath cannot be the subject of perjury in so far as such oath involves statements purely promissory.[11] But in so far as an official oath involves statements of present facts, it may serve as the predicate for perjury.[12]

Under statute expressly providing that violation of an official oath shall constitute perjury,[13] one coming within the scope of the statute may be convicted of perjury for violation of the promissory provisions of an official oath.[14]

[§ 18] f. Tax Returns.[15] An affidavit that a tax return contains all income subject to tax under the law is perjury if the taxpayer intentionally excludes income which he believes to be and which is subject to tax,[16] but not if he excludes income in law subject to tax which he honestly but mistakenly believes not subject to tax.[17] An erroneous computation of the tax cannot constitute perjury.[18]

[§ 19] 2. Falsity—a. In General. To constitute perjury or false swearing[19] the matter sworn to must be false in fact.[20] But perjury may be committed with respect to a statement true in fact where defendant falsely asserts that he knows it to be true when he really believes it to be false,[21] or lacks any

7. McDonough v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 227, 233, 84 SW 594, 122 AmSR 684.

"The court having jurisdiction to make the inquiry, in general terms, any deliberate and wilful false statement of a witness in answer to questions concerning the same would constitute a good assignment for perjury; and this, although the question might be too general to form the basis for the impeachment of the witness. The contrary doctrine announced in Meeks v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 420, 24 SW 98, followed by McMurtry v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 521, 43 SW 1010, and Higgins v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 539, 43 SW 1012, is hereby overruled." McDonough v. State, supra.

[a] Effect of generality of question.—A willful false statement in answer to a question propounded constitutes a good assignment of perjury, although the question asked is too general to form a basis for the impeachment of the witness. The generality of the question may, however, be a circumstance to show that the evidence was not given willfully and deliberately—that it was given under a mistake or misapprehension; but a witness having boldly answered a question and answered it falsely, as well as deliberately and willfully, cannot afterward avail himself of the generality of the question to defeat a prosecution for perjury. McDonough v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 227, 84 SW 594, 122 AmSR 684.

[a] "False" means "false in fact" as distinct from "legal falsity." Peo. v. Wong Fook Sam, 146 Cal. 114, 79 P 848.

[b] "Drawing an ax."—Before one can be convicted of falsely swearing in a prosecution for breach of the peace that he did not draw an ax on a certain party, it must appear that accused's act of drawing the ax amounted to an "assault," which is defined as an attempt or demonstration or effort, in striking distance, to strike another, although the person threatened may not be actually stricken, and mere proof that accused while considerably beyond striking distance had an ax in his hand is not sufficient to show that he "drew an ax" in the sense intended in a prosecution for breach of the peace. Yarberry v. Com., 209 Ky. 15, 272 SW 24.

[c] Falsity shown.—(1) If an importer, making affidavit that nothing had been concealed or suppressed whereby the United States might be defrauded, had knowledge of any document which, if known, would have led the United States to fix the customs duties higher than those based on the values stated in the consular invoice, his statement was so far false as to constitute perjury even though such suppressed document was not the usual consular invoice. U. S. v. Salen, 216 Fed. 420. (2) Where a third person executed to accused a mortgage note for six hundred and fifty dollars, without consideration, such six hundred and fifty dollar note being given merely to prevent creditors from levying on a crop, and also gave an unsecured note for eighty dollars, the testimony of accused on the examining trial of the third person for disposing of mortgaged property that the third person owed him the six hundred and fifty dollar note was false, and sustained a charge of perjury. knowledge of its truth or falsity,[22] the perjury in such cases resting upon the false statement of affiant's knowledge or belief.[23] To constitute perjury it is not essential that the statement be false in all respects, providing it is false in at least one material[24] respect.[25]

A statement substantially true but literally false is not necessarily perjury.[26]

[§ 20] b. Ambiguous Statements. A statement true in one sense and false in another is not perjury unless false in the sense used by accused.[27] But a defendant using unambiguous language in an unauthorized and twisted sense cannot escape conviction on the specious plea that his statement was true in the sense used.[28]

[§ 21] c. Half Truths. Neither perjury[29] nor false swearing[30] can be assigned upon statements literally true, although not the whole truth touching the matter,[31] especially where accused sets forth the whole truth immediately after making the incomplete statement.[32] But it has been held that, where a witness takes oath to tell the whole truth, a half truth may constitute perjury.[33]

"If one willfully and corruptly swears to a fact as of his own knowledge, when he in truth had not the knowledge, it is perjury, if the matter be under judicial investigation, and the testimony be material to the issue. Had the question referred to "the" tobacco, instead of "your" tobacco, the answer would have been false. But as it referred to "your"—that is, defendant's—tobacco, and he personally owned no tobacco, his answer was literally true and could not constitute false swearing. Weiner v. [§ 23] 3. Knowledge and Intent[37]—a. In General. To constitute perjury or false swearing[38] the false statement must be made with criminal intent.[39] In other words, the false statement must be made with intent to deceive;[40] the mens rea, or guilty knowledge, must be present,[41] and the statement must be willfully,[42] deliberately,[43] knowingly,[44] and

If a man does not take the precaution to make sure before swearing that the thing he believes to be true is false, he does not thereby become a criminal, but he becomes liable for the damages which may thereby be caused to others." corruptly[45] false. In characterizing the essential intent the courts have stated that defendant must be shown to have sworn knowingly and corruptly,[46] willfully and knowingly,[47] willfully and deliberately,[48] willfully and contrary to oath,[49] willfully and corruptly,[50] willfully, corruptly, and intentionally,[51] or willfully, corruptly, and maliciously.[52]

Terms defined. It has been held that "willfully" means intentionally,[53] deliberately,[54] with evil intent and legal malice;[55] implies a purpose of willingness to commit the act;[56] and is equivalent to "knowingly."[57] The word "deliberately" implies meditated as distinguished from inadvertent action.[58]

[§ 24] b. Elements Bearing on Intent[59]—(1) Knowledge of Falsity. To constitute perjury a false statement must be knowingly false.[60] That is, it must appear that accused knew his statement to be false or was consciously ignorant of its truth.[61]

See State v. Faulkner, 185 Mo. 673, 84 SW 967 (where the court quoted with approval from a conspiracy case to the effect that, in a perjury case, the knowledge which a witness must have in order to render him guilty of perjury need not be actual knowledge, but may be knowledge with which he is chargeable by reason of association with the transaction which constitutes the subject of the investigation).
"A man is even guilty of perjury if he swears to a particular fact, without knowing at the time whether it is true or false." 2 Wharton Cr. L. § 2201 [quot Klinger v. Markowitz, 54 App. Div. 299, 300, 633 mem, 65 NYS 369, 66 NYS 1125 mem, 1135 mem].
[a] Reason for rule.—"He who makes a positive affidavit to a particular condition thereby holds himself out as having some reasonably reliable information on the subject, and for one to swear to a fact, of the existence of which he knows himself to be entirely ignorant, is rightly held

ity to the contrary.[64] In the absence of a bona fide belief in the truth of a statement ignorance of its falsity is no excuse.[65] But reasonable ground for believing the statement to be true may furnish an adequate defense.[66] Under statutes so providing[67] it has been held that an unqualified statement of what one does not know to be true is equivalent to a statement of that which he knows to be false;[68] but such a provision must be read in connection with the statutes defining perjury, and under such statutes no one can be convicted unless such statement was made willfully,[69] maliciously,[70] and corruptly.[71]

[§ 26] (b) Reckless Statements. The weight of authority holds that a reckless statement made in ignorance of its falsity, but with an honest, though unreasonable, belief in its truth, is not perjury;[72] and, according to this view, the negligent failure to ascertain the truth of what one actually believes, on insufficient grounds, is not criminal.[73] But the minority rule holds that the positive affirmation of the truth of a statement false in fact and mistakenly believed to be true without reasonable cause for such belief is perjury.[74]

[§ 27] (3) Honest Mistake. A false statement which was obviously the result of an honest mistake,[75] such as one which has been made inadvertto constitute perjury." State v. Rupp, 96 Kan. 446, 449, 151 P 1111, LRA 1916B 848.

[a] Rule explained.—Such statutes merely go to the evidence by which a criminal intent may be shown and do not change the rule that a perjurious statement must be willfully and corruptly false. In other words the element of willfulness is just as necessary in the case of an unqualified statement not known to be true as in the case of a statement known to be false. Rose v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 294, 127 P 873.

[b] Testifying to facts told speaker by others.—If witness who testified to facts told him by others believed what had been told him, his testimony, although false, was not willfully so, and therefore not perjury, under Penal L. § 1620, requiring that the testimony be given willfully, that is, with a criminal intent, notwithstanding a section providing that an unqualified statement of what one does not know to be true is perjury. "An honest oath, though untrue, is not perjury." Herring v. State, 119 Ga. 709, 714, 46 SE 876.

"The offense consists in the swearing falsely and corruptly and not through mistake." State v. Mercer, 101 Md. 535, 538, 61 A 220.

[a] Good faith and reasonable grounds for belief in the truth of a

ently[76] or under agitation,[77] is not perjury, and this rule has been embodied in statutes in some jurisdictions.[78]

An illiterate person who swears to the contents of a false affidavit, relying in good faith upon the representations of others as to its contents and believing it to be true, is not guilty of perjury.[79]

[§ 28] (4) Mental and Physical Condition. Insanity depriving accused of the mental power to distinguish right from wrong,[80] or impairing his memory as to the matters stated,[81] precludes the deliberation and knowledge essential to commission of the crime of perjury. But mere physical illness is ordinarily no defense.[82]

Incapacity arising from the use of liquor[83] or drugs,[84] rendering accused incapable of having the necessary intent, is a valid defense.

[§ 29] (5) Duress and Threats.[85] A false statement made under duress is not perjury.[86] But threats falling short of actual duress are no defense.[87]

Legal compulsion to testify against the will or desire of the witness is not duress preventing a false statement from being perjury.[88] It is immaterial whether the witness appeared and testified voluntarily or under compulsion of a subpœna.[89]

[§ 30] (6) Advice of Counsel. If one accused of perjury or false swearing[90] fully and in good faith lays the facts before counsel, and upon them is advised, as a matter of law, that a certain statement may be made which will be the truth, and, acting on this advice, the client swears to the statement, believing that he has been correctly advised, it cannot be said that the oath is willfully and corruptly false, and hence a charge of perjury cannot be predicated upon it.[91] If, however, he fails to communicate all the material facts within his knowledge, advice of counsel furnishes him no defense;[92] nor is such advice a defense where it was sought as a mere cover to secure immunity from the penalty of the crime.[93] Advice of counsel as to a matter present-false statement preclude the willful and corrupt intent essential to perjury. State v. Fairbault, 20 OhNPNS 499.

[b] Ignorance of language.—Where a witness testified falsely by mistake arising from her ignorance of the language in which the questions were asked and from her failure fully to understand the purport of such questions, she was not guilty of perjury. U. S. v. De Chaves, 14 Philippine 565.

[c] Literate person signing without reading.—Where accused answered questions asked him orally, and the questioner inserted the answers in writing, and then accused, without reading the affidavit, signed and swore to it in ignorance that it contained false statements inserted by the questioner through error, accused was not guilty of perjury. Porter v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 301, 88 SW 359.

[d] Mistaken identity.—Where accused swore that at a certain time he saw one Agilbert Theoret enter a certain building, and in fact it was not said Agilbert but another that accused saw, the falsity of his statement did not render it perjury where the proof showed that accused merely made a mistake and was absolutely sincere in his belief that it was said Agilbert he had seen. Rex v. Trempe, 28 RevLeg (Que.) 282, 38 CanCrCas 13.

[e] Misunderstanding question.—A false answer arising from defendant's honest failure to understand the meaning of the question asked is not perjury. Thrasher v. State, (Okl. Cr.) 237 P 139.

Lindsay, (N. B.) 30 CanCrCas 387 (applying rule of strict construction to a New Brunswick statute requiring oath by intoxicated person as to where he obtained liquor). Contra Peo. v. Willey, 2 Park. [a] Overindulgence in whisky.—One giving false testimony cannot be guilty of perjury if at the time he is so intoxicated from drinking whisky as to incapacitate him from understanding his testimony or willfully and knowingly swearing falsely. Williams v. Com., 113 Ky. 652, 68 SW 871, 24 KyL 465.

[b] In Texas (1) it has been stated, without discussion of a penal statute then in force, that intoxication of defendant is properly considered under a charge that a false statement under mistake, agitation, or inadvertence is not perjury, the implication being that intoxication precluding a deliberate intent to falsify is an adequate defense. Sisk v. State, 28 Tex. A. 432, 13 SW 647. (2) It has been held under a penal statute providing that "neither intoxication nor temporary insanity of the mind produced by the voluntary recent use of ardent spirits shall constitute any excuse . . . for the commission of crime" that drunkenness without insanity is a defense to perjury because in the absence of deliberation, impossible to a drunken man, there can be no commission of perjury, and therefore no commission of "crime" within the meaning of such statute providing that drunkenness is "no excuse for the commission of crime." Lyle v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 103, 112, 19 SW 903. (3) In a subsequent case construing the same statute, and stated by the official reporter to overrule the Lyle case, supra, the court expressly denied the soundness of the reasoning of the Lyle case. But said subsequent case was not an indictment for perjury but an indictment for homicide. See Evers v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 318, 20 SW 744, 37 AmSR 811, 18 LRA 421.

[a] For instance, in a prosecution for false swearing it is no defense that accused made a false affidavit, deliberately and with knowledge of its falsity, because his attorney suggested this means of getting the case

ing no question of law is not a defense.[94]

[§ 31] 4. Motive. While there are some statements to the effect that "corrupt motive" is indispensable to perjury,[95] nevertheless, under the general rule,[96] the specific motive[97] or ultimate object to be attained by the false statement[98] is immaterial to the commission of the crime, where the necessary criminal intent[99] and other elements of the crime[1] are present.

[§ 32] 5. Materiality of Statement[2]—a. Necessity That Statement Be Material. At common law[3] and under statutes preserving the common-law rule in this respect,[4] a false statement must be material to the issue or question under consideration in order to constitute perjury.[5] Irrelevant testimony, although false, cannot be made the basis of a charge of perjury;[6] nor will a false oath as to superfluous and immaterial matter sustain an indictment for this offense.[7]

[a] Lying like a gentleman.—Where defendant in a bastardy proceeding falsely testified that he was not married, the fact that he did so to save his wife and mother from disgrace was no defense to a charge of perjury, if the fact that he was married was material, as his object or motive was unimportant. Peo. v. Moris, 155 App. Div. 711, 140 NYS 887, 29 N. Y. Cr. 240.

Under statutes changing the common-law rule in this respect,[8] materiality is not an element of the crime of perjury.[9]

False swearing. Materiality is not an element of the statutory crime of false swearing,[10] and the distinction in this respect between false swearing and perjury as it is usually defined has heretofore been pointed out.[11] It has been said, however, that the false swearing must be relevant.[12]

[§ 33] b. What Constitutes—(1) In General. A statement can be neither material nor immaterial in itself, but its materiality must be determined in accordance with its relation to some extraneous matter.[13] False testimony relative to a nonexistent issue cannot be material.[14] But any statement which is relevant to the matter under investigation is sufficiently material to form the basis of a charge of perjury.[15] The test of materiality is whether a false statement can influence the tribunal[16]—not whether it does.[17]

Contradiction of a material statement is itself necessarily material.[18]

[§ 34] (2) Degree of Materiality. The degree of materiality is unimportant.[19] False testimony directly pertinent to the main issue is of course ma-

[a] "It is fundamental that in order to constitute the crime of perjury the testimony given, which is charged to be false, must be material to the issue presented at the trial." State v. Dineen, 203 Mo. 628, 634, 102 SW 480. To same effect Com. v. Garvey, 65 Pa. Super. 56.

[b] "From time immemorial the common law has made the materiality of false testimony an essential ingredient of the crime of perjury. From their earliest beginnings our statutes have always embodied that rule. Our penal laws, but recently recodified, have continued it. That, in short, is the unquestioned law of this state." Peo. v. Teal, 196 N. Y. 372, 376, 89 NE 1086, 25 LRANS 120, 17 AnnCas 1175 [quot Peo. v. Goodheim, 188 App. Div. 148, 150, 176 NYS 468].

[c] Directly or indirectly pertinent.—Where a person is indicted for perjury, it must appear that the matter testified to was either directly pertinent to the issue or point in question, or tended to prove such issue or point. State v. Thomas, 25 Del. 20, 78 A 640.

[d] In England (1) it was originally held that to constitute perjury the false statement must be material to the issue. Reg. v. Holden, 12 Cox C. C. 166; Reg. v. Tate, 12 Cox C. C. 7; Reg. v. Alsop, 11 Cox C. C. 264; Reg. v. Townsend, 10 Cox C. C. 356; Reg. v. Fairlie, 9 Cox C. C. 209; Reg. v. Ball, 6 Cox C. C. 360; Reg. v. Owen, 6 Cox C. C. 105; Reg. v. Murray, 1 F. & F. 80; Rex v. Benesech, Peake 93, 170 Reprint 205; Rex v. Dunston, R. & M. 109, 21 ECL 712, 171 Reprint 960. (2) But under the Perjury Act of 1911 it has been held that the question is not whether the statement was material to the issue, but whether it was material in the proceedings. Rex v. Wheeler, [1917] 1 K. B. 283.

13. Peo. v. Barbosa, 29 Porto Rico 433, 434.

"For practical purposes a statement may be regarded as true or false independently of any other matter or thing. But the word 'material,' as used in our Code, is a relative term. Ordinarily, at least, the alleged false statement constituting the gist of the offense is not intrinsically material or material per se or material in any absolute sense or material to itself, but must be material to some external situation, issue or subject matter. Hence, to say simply that the matter is material is meaningless." Peo. v. Barbosa, supra.

[a] "It is well settled that, to constitute perjury, it is not necessary that the matter sworn to should be directly and immediately material, but it is sufficient if it is so connected with the matter at issue as to have a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove some fact that is material." Lawson v. State, (Okl. Cr.) 254 P 110, 111.

[b] Reason for rule.—"It is but common knowledge that it frequently occurs in the trial of causes that inquiries are made of witnesses touching matters which do not directly concern the commission of the acts which constitute the offense, yet such inquiries and answers may be material and highly important to the end that the triers of the fact may properly and intelligently weigh the testimony in the cause. If it is so connected with the matter at issue as to have a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove some fact that is material by giving weight or probability to, or detracting from, the testimony of a witness thereto, it is sufficient and makes the testimony material." lish the issue.[27] False testimony relative to a collateral matter may be perjury irrespective of the truth or falsity of the main fact at issue.[28] But if the false statement is not even circumstantially material it cannot be perjury.[29]

[§ 35] (3) Time. In testing materiality of testimony charged to be false, reference must be had to the issue as it existed when the oath was administered to the witness.[30] The fact that the issue concerning which the witness testifies falsely is afterward admitted does not render the testimony immaterial so as to prevent a conviction of perjury therefor;[31] but admission of the fact before the false testimony is given renders such testimony immaterial.[32] Subsequent change in the issues, rendering material a false statement which was immaterial when given, does not make such statement perjury.[33]

"In general terms, it may be said that testimony may be assigned for perjury either where it directly tends to prove or disprove one side or the other of the main issue, or where, under the established rules of evidence, it indirectly tends to do so by crediting or discrediting other evidence, or the testimony of another witness. In the former case, the materiality may frequently be determined by reference to the pleadings, without regard to the other testimony; in the latter case, the testimony being given on some secondary issue of fact arising on the trial of the case, its materiality can only be determined by an examination of the other testimony which it is intended to corroborate or contradict." 35. Cross references:

statement has no bearing on its materiality,[36] and the guilt of one who has falsely sworn does not depend upon the result of the proceedings in which it occurred.[37] It does not lie with the perjurer to say that if he had sworn the truth the case for other reasons would have failed;[38] and if a person swears falsely in respect of any fact relevant to the issue, he is guilty of perjury, although failure of the case was caused by defect in proof of a different fact.[39] Conversely, the fact that the case is won in spite of defendant's false testimony will not render the testimony immaterial.[40]

That the false testimony was unnecessary to accomplish the end in view will not render it immaterial.[41]

Administering officer's knowledge of falsity. [a] Subsequent plea of guilty nullifying effect of false statement.—In a prosecution for gaming, the witness, who swore falsely for the defense in respect of any material fact, was guilty of perjury, although a judgment of conviction of gaming could have been entered upon a plea of guilty afterward made by defendants charged with gaming. [a] Even though a witness does not testify to anything else before or after falsely stating that he has never been convicted of perjury, such false statement is material since under statute one convicted of perjury is disqualified to testify, and his qualification as a witness is in itself a material matter. State v. Carpenter, 130 Wash. 23, 225 P 654.

[b] Witness' testimony on voir dire examination that he had not violated rule excluding witnesses from court room was material and sufficient to support a charge of perjury, even if such violation without the connivance of the party would not render the witness incompetent, since the disobedience of the rule or order was one of the facts pertinent to the competence of the witness. "It is generally held to be perjury to swear falsely to anything affecting the credibility of the witness himself or the credibility of another witness in the case." Miller v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 196, 198, 131 P 181.

[a] If it either supports or at-

ly inadmissible and ought not to be received,[45] as where the question was in such a form that the witness should have refused to answer it.[46] So also perjury may be predicated on a false answer of a witness that he had never been convicted of a felony,[47] nor imprisoned for crime,[48] as such issue affects his credibility and is therefore material to the issue, provided the evidence of conviction is not too remote.[49] But where the testimony of the witness impeached is in itself immaterial, false statements affecting its credibility are not so far material as to constitute perjury.[50]

Contradictory statements. Denial of past statements contradictory to present statements is material on the issue of credibility.[51] In like manner testimony may be material which contradicts the testimony or affects the credit of another witness whose testimony is material.[52]

The name of a witness has been regarded as material on the question of credibility.[53]

[§ 39] (6) Inadmissible and Excluded Evidence —(a) In General. False testimony may be sufficiently material to constitute perjury, although it was legally inadmissible[54] and subsequently withtacks credibility of a witness false testimony may be perjury. Fields v. State, 94 Fla. 490, 114 S 317. To same effect Peo. v. Collins, 6 Cal. A. 492, 92 P 513.

(2) Where accused swore before a grand jury that one Dave Henry had sold him whisky, and on such testimony said Henry was indicted, and on the trial of said Henry defendant falsely denied making said statements before the grand jury, and the case against Henry failed for total lack of proof, defendant was not guilty of perjury since his denial of his previous testimony was immaterial. Even had accused admitted his previous testimony, while on the trial denying he knew said Henry, the latter could not have been convicted, and for this reason the denial of the previous testimony was without materiality. [a] For example (1) where a witness has given testimony material to the issue, and in answer to a question as to whether he had not previously made a different statement he denies having done so, the charge of perjury may be founded on such denial. State v. Smith, 126 La. 135, 52 S 244. (2) Where in a prosecution for perjury, the state offered evidence that the defendant stated under oath to a deputy attorney-general, who was investigating a charge of election bribery, that a person named had attempted to influence defendant's vote by the use of money, and upon this testimony an indictment was filed against the person named, charging him with having offered defendant money for his vote, and defendant, when sworn as a witness in that case, denied having made the alleged statements before the deputy attorney-general, if defendant made such absolute and false denial of having made the alleged statements to the deputy attorney-general, then the denial was material to the trial of the bribery case, in that it affected his credibility as a witness. State v. Rash, 25 Del. 77, 78 A 405.

52. Peo. v. Lem You, 97 Cal. 224, 32 P 11.

53. Com. v. Rush, 17 Pa. Dist. 225; Reg. v. Mullany, L. & C. 593, 169 Reprint 1528. See Reg. v. Worley, 3 Cox C. C. 535, 542 (where a witness falsely denied that he had ever been known by a certain name and the court said: "I do not think that the evidence of materiality is sufficient. I do not mean to say that a false answer, given under such circumstances as those proved, might not support a charge of perjury, but I am of opinion that in this case enough has not been shown on the part of the prosecution to connect the false answer with the issue on which the evidence was given. It might have been material, but we cannot clearly see that it was so").

[a] Reason for rule.—"Shall a witness have the right to bar all inquiry as to his identity by giving an assumed name? He may have been convicted of perjury, or other facts seriously bearing upon his credibility might appear through the knowledge of his name; but if the rule is that he can give a false name, any investigation as to such facts is completely stopped." Com. v. Rush, 17 Pa. Dist. 225, 226.

[b] Where a detective under cross-examination stated that his name was Howard Rush, when in fact it was Rush Brader, such false statement was sufficiently material to constitute perjury, since the name of the witness was important in facilitating investigation of the antecedents of the witness with a view to attacking his credibility. Com. v. Rush, 17 Pa. Dist. 225.

54. Peo. v. Teal, 196 N. Y. 372, 89 NE 1086, 25 LRANS 120, 17 AnnCas 1175; Peo. v. Brill, 100 Misc. 92, 165 NYS 65; Meyers v. U. S., 5 Okl. 173, 48 P 186; Reg. v. Philpotts, 2 Den. C. C. 302, 169 Reprint 514; Reg. v. Gibbons, L. & C. 109, 169 Reprint 1324.

[a] Reason for rule.—"The evidence received need not satisfy auxiliary tests as to form or competency or rules of procedure. The evidence having been received, the precise question as to whether or not it may be a foundation for the charge of perjury is confined to the question whether it is material. If 'relevant' be defined as a broader term than 'material,' even matter received as relevant would not support the charge unless it was also material. It is in this sense that the language in the leading case of Peo. v. Teal, 196 N. Y. 372, 377, 89 NE 1086, 25 LRANS 120, 17 AnnCas 1175, is applicable. Judge Werner . . . says: 'We may pass without discussion the elements of irrelevancy and incompetency. These could have been waived. They are, moreover, not essential to the commission of perjury as defined in the statute.'" Peo. v. Brill, 100 Misc. 92, 96, 165 NYS 65.

[b] "The test . . . is not whether as a matter of formality the testimony might have been excluded under the rules of procedure or whether it was correctly admitted under the rules of evidence but rather, having been received, being false, whether it was material matter, that is whether it had probative value rationally to influence the result upon the merits." Peo. v. Brill, 100 Misc. 92, 98, 165 NYS 65.

[c] Testimony which might have been excluded.—"If the testimony is wilfully false and is material for any purpose under the issue and is received, even though it might have been excluded under some rule of admissibility, it is perjury." Peo. v. Brill, 100 Misc. 92, 95, 165 NYS 65.

drawn.[55] But false testimony actually excluded,[56] or which should have been excluded on the ground of immateriality,[57] is not perjury.

Testimony going to the admissibility of documentary evidence is ordinarily material.[58]

Error in the order of admission of testimony does not prevent such testimony from constituting perjury if false.[59]

[§ 40] (b) Incompetent Testimony.[60] Incompetent testimony may constitute perjury.[61] A party has a right to waive all objections to the competency of a witness produced against him, and, having done so, the evidence becomes as competent and material as though no such objection had existed, and the witness will be guilty of perjury if he testifies falsely.[62] It has been held that, although testimony ought by law to be taken in writing, yet, if it is received orally, perjury may nevertheless be assigned on it;[63] but there is contrary authority.[64] But where authority exists to swear only a competent witness, and an incompetent witness is sworn, his testimony cannot be criminal because in this case the incompetency goes to the legal authority for administration of the oath.[65]

[§ 41] (c) Irrelevant Testimony.[66] Irrelevant testimony cannot constitute perjury,[67] even though it is "material" in the sense of having probative force.[68]

Testimony in rebuttal of irrelevant testimony is immaterial, and therefore perjury cannot be assigned upon it if false.[69]

[§ 42] (7) Materiality to Particular Matters or Proceedings[70]—(a) Criminal Prosecutions[71]—aa. In General. In accordance with, and subject to, the general rules above stated,[72] particular statements have been held to be either material[73] or immate-

Co. 663 (holding that testimony relative to the execution of a power of attorney, which power was defectively executed and therefore inadmissible in evidence, cannot constitute perjury because the said instrument being inadmissible testimony respecting it relates to an immaterial matter).

[a] Identification of document.—Where, in an action on an oral contract, plaintiff, when shown a writing purporting to be signed by himself and defendant, testified, "I never saw that before," and that defendant did not sign it in his presence, his statement was material, and would have been material even though plaintiff by such testimony had succeeded in preventing the introduction of the exhibited contract in evidence. State v. Stilwell, 109 Or. 643, 221 P 174.

59. Slade v. State, (Miss.) 119 S 355.

[a] For example, since under Hemingway Code (1927) § 2161 a judge or chancellor in a habeas corpus trial is merely required to inquire into cause of imprisonment or detention, the fact that the sheriff in such proceeding took the initiative and introduced evidence first did not affect the materiality of testimony, so as to preclude conviction for perjury therein, particularly since proceeding in such manner was, at the most, a mere error in procedure. rial[74] to criminal prosecutions for various offenses.

Testimony tending to prove an alibi is generally held material to a criminal prosecution so as to sustain a charge of perjury based upon its falsity.[75]

Testimony bearing on the question of punishment is ordinarily deemed material.[76]

[§ 43] bb. Proceedings before Grand Jury.[77] On an investigation before a grand jury of an alleged crime, any testimony tending to establish either that such crime has been in fact committed, or that it has not been committed, is material, and perjury may be assigned upon the testimony of a witness before that body which is willfully false in respect of any fact tending to establish or disprove the commission of such crime.[78] This rule has been applied to grand jury investigations of conspiracy,[79]

631, 199 P 576 (where one had pleaded guilty of murder and sought to withdraw his plea and enter a plea of not guilty on the ground of coercion, threats, etc., alleging in his affidavit that he had been assaulted by a deputy district attorney, false testimony by another witness that a party acting under the sheriff as an armed guard struck such prisoner with his fist was material testimony, since the issue was whether defendant reasonably feared violence at the hands of such attorney or a mob as alleged, rendering the witness guilty of perjury so as to authorize denial of a petition for habeas corpus); Wright v. State, 30 Okl. Cr. 425, 236 P 633 (testimony weakening evidence of witness by placing him outside instead of inside room where murder was committed); Com. v. Rogo, 71 Pa. Super. 109 (testimony respecting dying declaration).

[i] Larceny.—Peo. v. Albert, (Cal. A.) 267 P 587 (statements relative to defendant's purchase of goods stolen and explanation of reasons for nonpayment); Herndon v. State, 72 Fla. 108, 72 S 833 (conviction of similar offense); State v. Easter, 185 Iowa 476, 170 NW 748 (presence of witness when defendant took possession of stolen goods and alleged purchase of goods from third parties); Martinez v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 479, 46 SW 826 (statement that witness did not see larceny defendant driving away the hogs he was accused of stealing); Cravey v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 557, 28 SW 472 (time of branding stolen cattle).

[j] Liquor law violation.—Peo. v. Dunstan, 59 Cal. A. 574, 211 P 813; Aaron v. State, 12 Ga. A. 40, 76 SE 753 (ownership of liquor by another than accused); State v. Young, 153 Iowa 4, 132 NW 813, AnnCas1913E 70 (the false testimony of one charged with having given in a county generally whisky to a person in the habit of becoming intoxicated that he had not given such person whisky in a barn or paint shop is material, although no one testified otherwise, and he may be convicted of perjury); State v. Adams, 119 Kan. 509, 240 P 955 (denial on trial of statements made at inquisition relative to receipt of intoxicating liquors from accused); Robinson v. State, 146 Miss. 753, 112 S 167 (denial of possession).

[k] Malicious mischief.—State v. Jennings, 278 Mo. 544, 213 SW 421 (common agreement of defendant and associates to throw rocks at street car).

[l] Perjury.—Weinstein v. State, 146 Md. 80, 125 A 889 (in a prosecution for swearing falsely as to his interest in certain property, when defendant offered self as bail for an accused, defendant's testimony that he did not receive money for becoming security was material as respected the issues of the perjury trial, so as to justify a second charge of perjury based upon perjury in the first perjury trial); Reg. v. Alsop, 11 Cox C. C. 264 (false testimony by A in trial of C for perjury, in C's affidavit, which C denied swearing to, relative to public announcement in C's presence that such affidavit was made by C).

[m] Rape.—Dickerson v. State, 18 Wyo. 440, 111 P 857, 116 P 448 (diseased condition of accused).

[n] Receiving stolen goods.—Peo. v. Senegram, 27 Cal. A. 301, 149 P 786.

[o] Robbery.—Lawson v. State, (Okl. Cr.) 254 P 110 (presence of third person at attempted robbery material on preliminary hearing before magistrate).

[p] Seduction.—State v. Blize, 111 Mo. 464, 20 SW 210 (false statement by witness that he had had intercourse with seduced girl prior to her alleged seduction by defendant).

74. See cases infra this note.

[a] Assault and battery.—Pressley v. State, 18 Ala. A. 40, 88 S 291 (in a prosecution for assault and battery false statements that accused did not arrest and detain the victim, and did not represent himself to be the high sheriff, are not material to the only issue—of whether the victim was touched by accused—and therefore cannot form the basis of a conviction for perjury); Reg. v. Tate, 12 Cox C. C. 7 (false statement of facts which might have provoked, but which would not have legally justified, the assault).

[b] Burglary.—Bledsoe v. State, 64 Ark. 474, 42 SW 899 (false statement as to size of hole in safe immaterial where no evidence to show safe was in building burglarized).

[c] Corrupt Practices Act prosecution.—U. S. v. Cameron, 282 Fed. 684 (the Corrupt Practices Act limits the amount of money a candidate for public office may lawfully expend but not the amount he may receive in aid of his candidacy, and therefore a false statement as to the amount received is not so far material as to warrant conviction under a statute making a false oath as to a material matter perjury).

[d] Disorderly conduct.—State v. Dineen, 203 Mo. 628, 102 SW 480 (testimony relative to disorderly conduct in a place other than that where defendant was accused of having been disorderly).

[e] Liquor law violation.—Lednum v. State, 169 Ark. 396, 275 SW 699 (making of whisky in county other than that involved in alleged violation of law); Campbell v. State, 104 Tex. Cr. 596, 285 SW 820 (statement immaterial in prosecution for possession and transportation of liquor).

[f] Perjury.—Weinstein v. State, 146 Md. 80, 125 A 889 (in a prosecution for perjury in having falsely deposed as to his interest in certain property, in criminal proceedings against M for purpose of qualifying as bail, defendant's alleged false testimony that he did not receive money for going bail for R, charged with crime in proceeding separate from those against M, was immaterial, and could not found a second charge of perjury based upon perjury in the first perjury trial).

[f] Partial alibi.—(1) "Perjury may be assigned with respect to testimony concerning the whereabouts at a particular time of one charged with crime, although it may fail utterly to establish an alibi by reason of important intervals not accounted for." State v. Fail, 121 Kan. 855, 250 P 311. (2) In a trial upon a charge of statutory rape, where complainant told of a series of acts of sexual intercourse over a period of some six weeks preceding that relied upon for conviction, and such defendant during that time was living elsewhere than with his wife, and promised to marry her when he got a divorce, perjury was properly assigned with respect to false testimony by his wife (who said she and her husband had been living together practically all the time since their marriage) that about a week before the act for which he was prosecuted he had visited a neighboring town with her, spent the night there, and on the next morning accompanied her on a shopping trip, paying for a dress and other articles which she bought. [a] Carrying arms.—Whether accused was armed when he left premises he was accused of burglarizing is material, because even if it did not tend to connect accused with commission of the crime of burglary it was competent as part of the res gestæ of such crime and material on the question of punishment, and false swearing as to that matter constitutes perjury. 79. Brzezinski v. U. S., 198 Fed. 65, 117 CCA 173.

[a] False testimony relative to attempted bribery to conceal evidence.—On investigation by a grand jury of a charge of conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States, testimony that accused attempted to bribe an employee of the government to conceal evidence was mate-gambling,[80] homicide,[81] smuggling,[82] keeping a disorderly house,[83] and violations of liquor laws.[84] The fact that at the time the testimony was given, the grand jury had already voted to indict in the case under consideration,[85] although they had not actually done so, but were still considering the case,[86] does not render such testimony immaterial, so as to be incapable of supporting the charge of perjury. Nor can a witness who falsely denies before the grand jury any knowledge of a fact material to the investigation defend a charge of perjury on the ground that the evidence sought from him would have been merely cumulative.[87] Any testimony which might properly affect the bringing of an indictment is material,[88] irrespective of whether or not an indictment is found,[89] and irrespective of the guilt or innocence of accused.[90] On the other hand, false testimony as to matters not pertinent to the investigation are immaterial and cannot constitute perjury.[91] If the grand jury have no legal authority to inquire into a particular matter false testimony in relation to such matter is immaterial.[92]

Testimony tending to impede or suspend the investigation is material to a grand jury inquiry.[93]

Form of question. Even though the question asked is too general to form the basis for impeachment of the witness, a false answer thereto may be perjury.[94]

Meaning of "point in question." A statute requiring testimony to be material to "the point in quesrial, and false testimony before the grand jury relative thereto constituted perjury. Brzezinski v. U. S., 198 Fed. 65, 117 CCA 173.

82. U. S. v. Mau Sing, 3 Hawaii Fed. 385.

[a] Statements held material.—(1) In a grand jury investigation of smuggling of certain knives of foreign manufacture false statements of defendant that some of such knives in his possession had been found by him, and some purchased from an unknown party on a wharf, were pertinent to the issue of where he obtained such knives, and where he obtained them was material to the investigation, so that defendant's false statements were perjury. U. S. v. Mau Sing, 3 Hawaii Fed. 385. (2) False statements that defendant did not know whether or not such knives had been smuggled, when he actually did know that the knives in his possession were not smuggled, would constitute perjury. U. S. v. Mau Sing, supra.

83. State v. Burnett, 253 Mo. 341, 161 SW 680.

[a] Acting as panderer.—Where a hotel proprietor was suspected of keeping a bawdyhouse and on a grand jury investigation defendant, a porter in the hotel, falsely denied that he had acted as panderer and brought men and women together in the hotel for immoral purposes, such false testimony was material and constituted perjury. State v. Burnett, 253 Mo. 341, 161 SW 680.

84. State v. Ruddy, 287 Mo. 52, 228 SW 760; State v. Ackerman, 214 Mo. 325, 113 SW 1087, 22 LRANS 1192; Logan v. State, 96 Tex. Cr. 601, 258 SW 830; Jones v. State, 76 Tex. Cr. 398, 174 SW 1071; Trinkle v. State, 71 Tex. Cr. 64, 158 SW 544.

[a] False statement as to persons present at an illegal sale of liquor is material to a grand jury investigation of liquor law violations. Logan v. State, 96 Tex. Cr. 601, 258 SW 830.

[b] Hauling beer to illegal seller.—On an investigation by the grand jury as to persons illegally selling intoxicating liquors, testimony of a drayman as to whether he had hauled beer at various times during the nighttime to the persons charged with illegal sales, and to the places where the sales were alleged to have been made, was material, and perjury could be predicated thereon, although it had no reference to the actual illegal selling. State v. Ackerman, 214 Mo. 325, 113 SW 1087, 22 LRANS 1192.

[c] Presence of witness at speakeasy when liquor was not being sold was collaterally material. State v. Ruddy, 287 Mo. 52, 228 SW 760.

[d] Securing liquor from accused.—Testimony before a grand jury investigating illegal sales of liquor that defendant had not secured liquor from the one charged with its sale was sufficiently material to sustain a conviction of perjury. Jones v. State, 76 Tex. Cr. 398, 174 SW 1071.

[e] Storing liquor in house of witness.—Where the grand jury investigating violations of the law prohibiting the sale and storing of intoxicating liquors investigated whether certain persons had received and stored liquor in a house rented by a witness, and whether he knew that the persons had received liquor on a designated date and stored it in the house, the false testimony of the witness that no liquor had been received and stored in his house was material to the inquiry. "In an inquiry by the grand jury the rule in respect to what is material is of necessity much broader than that governing the trial of a cause. The rule as applied to testimony before the grand jury is laid down in State v. Sargood, 80 Vt. 415, 68 A 49, 130 AmSR 995, 13 AnnCas 367, as follows: 'False statements by a witness are sufficiently material to the issue to sustain a prosecution for perjury where the statements may probably have influenced the jury in reaching their conclusions.'" Actual effect of testimony as bearing on materiality generally see supra § 36.

90. State v. Carothers, 69 Or. 382, 138 P 1077.

[a] Illustration.—Testimony before a grand jury investigating gambling that the witness had not seen poker played in a certain building for money was material irrespective of whether or not an indictment was found and irrespective of the guilt or innocence of the party whose alleged gambling activities were being investigated. State v. Carothers, 69 Or. 382, 138 P 1077.

91. Clayton v. U. S., 284 Fed. 537.

[a] Liquor law violation.—In a grand jury inquiry as to violations of the National Prohibition Act by persons other than the witness, a question to him whether he had been intoxicated within the year and a half preceding the inquiry was not material to the inquiry so that a false answer thereto by the witness did not render him liable to conviction for perjury. Clayton v. U. S., 284 Fed. 537.

92. Pankey v. Peo., 2 Ill. 80.

Lack of authority as bearing on proceeding considered as element of crime of perjury see infra § 67.

"It is perjury to swear falsely to what, if true, would merely cause the particular proceeding to be abated." 2 Bishop New Cr. L. § 1032 [quot Smith v. State, supra].

[a] "The test of materiality in a grand jury's investigation is whether the false testimony has a natural effect or tendency to influence, impede, or dissuade the grand jury from pursuing its investigation, and, if it does, an indictment for perjury may be predicated upon it." Carroll v. U. S., 16 F. (2d) 951, 953 [certiorari den 273 U. S. 763 mem, 47 SCt 477 mem, 71 L. ed. 880 mem].

[b] Illustration.—Whatever evidence tends to influence the result on the direct or any collateral issue is material; and, where the grand jury had heard that a witness had been seen with whisky, and had given whisky to another and were endeavoring to discover from whom he had purchased it, in order to ascertain whether it had been sold without a license, his false testimony that he had not given that person any whisky, but that he and the person had ordered whisky from a certain place, which testimony prevented the investigation, was material, and perjury could be predicated thereon. Smith v. State, 91 Ark. 200, 120 SW 985.

[c] Occupant of champagne bath.—Where defendant, in proceedings to ascertain whether a violation of the National Prohibition Act had been committed, testified that a bath tub placed on the stage at a theater party and from which various people drank contained ginger ale and not champagne, and was acquitted of perjury as to the aforesaid statement, but also testified that no one was in such tub, when as a matter of fact a nude woman was in such tub, his false statement relative to the presence or absence of an occupant of the tub was so far material to the grand jury investigation as to constitute perjury, its materiality consisting in its tendency to prevent the grand jury from learning the identity of an additional witness who could testify as to the contents of the tub. Carroll v. U. S., 16 F. (2d) 951 [certiorari den 273 U. S. 763 mem, 47 SCt 477 mem, 71 L. ed. 880 mem].

[g] Habeas corpus.—Slade v. State, (Miss.) 119 S 355 (testimony tending to support or negative facts alleged in petition was material, and, if false, constituted perjury, although not in fact identifying person being restrained of his liberty).

[h] Highway, proceeding to establish.—State v. Schultz, 57 Ind. 19 (length of time road had been in public use).

[i] Insurance report.—Peo. v. Corrigan, 195 N. Y. 1, 87 NE 792 (statement relative to existence of loans in annual report of insurance company filed with state superintendent of insurance).

[j] Land patent application.—Meyers v. U. S., 5 Okl. 173, 48 P 186 (holding that if the statements in an affidavit in a land contest are such as to call for judicial action, and are of sufficient importance to require action, and are pertinent to the issue under consideration, perjury will lie. Where a sworn statement in a land contest affidavit is sufficient to order a contest, or influence the action of the department of the interior in withholding a patent or in deferring action upon the patent, perjury may be properly assigned upon such statement).

[k] Marriage license, application for.—Peo. v. Torterice, 66 Cal. A. 115, 225 P 760 (age of applicant's fiancee); State v. Randall, 166 Minn. 381, 208 NW 14 (age and residence of applicant's bride to be); Field v. State, 29 Oh. Cir. Ct. 302 (number of times applicant previously married).

[l] Passport application.—State v. Woerndle, 109 Or. 461, 209 P 604, 220 P 744 (a disbarment proceeding in which an attorney's false statement on application for a passport that he was about to go abroad and intended to return to the United States within a year when in fact his intention was to give the passport to a German reserve officer to enable the latter to travel under defendant's name was held sufficiently material to constitute perjury serving as ground for disbarment).

[m] Police force, application for appointment to.—Peo. v. Link, 4 NYS 436, 6 N. Y. Cr. 185 (denial that applicant had ever been indicted for crime, bearing on moral fitness for position).

[n] Recording instrument.—Tuttle v. Peo., 36 N. Y. 431, 2 Transcr. A. 306 (where a person, from corrupt motives, erases the signature of the subscribing witness to a deed, and procures the instrument to be recorded by falsely swearing that he himself is the subscribing witness, he is guilty of perjury; and the fact that the deed is void for uncertainty in the description does not alter the case where the deed is nevertheless material as record evidence of the execution and contents of the instrument).

[o] Selective Service Act proceedings.—Whiteside v. U. S., 257 Fed. 509, 168 CCA 513 (false statement that registrant had a wife dependent upon him for support, made to secure exemption from military service).

[q] Voir dire.—Peo. v. Rendigs, 123 Misc. 32, 205 NYS 133 (prospective juror's denial of personal acquaintance with defendants).

[a] Election proceedings.—Peo. v. Schweichler, 16 Cal. A. 738, 117 P 939 (false statement as to working for proceedings.

On an application to serve as bail false statements relative to the value of applicant's property,[8] or the nature of his title thereto,[9] or the extent of his liabilities,[10] are so far material as to constitute perjury. But the fact that the testimony alleged to be false caused the court to accept the party as bail will not supply or constitute an equivalent for a want of materiality in the testimony charged to be false.[11]

[§ 47] c. Knowledge of Materiality.[12] Knowledge of the materiality of a false statement is not an element of perjury.[13]

[§ 48] 6. Damage or Prejudice.[14] It is not necessary that the false oath be credited, or that the party against whom it is given be prejudiced thereby,[15] for the prosecution is not grounded on the damage to the party, but on the abuse of public justice.[16]

[§ 49] 7. Legal Provision for Oath and Matter or Proceeding in Which Statement Is Made[17]—a. Legal Provision for Oath—(1) In General. A voluntary oath neither required nor authorized—that is, not provided for—by law, cannot constitute perjury.[18] The oath must have been administered upon an occasion permitting of its lawful administration.[19] In other words, it must appear not only that the statement is material,[20] but also that the oath itself is material[21] in the sense of being required or authorized by law. The oath is "required by law" if the statement must be sworn to before it can be a certain party not material to issue of residence in precinct).

[c] Impious oath.—"There can be no doubt, but that an extra-judicial oath, or one relating to a matter utterly immaterial, or even an impious oath, taken in idle conversation, may be as offensive in the eye of heaven, as the most solemn oath taken in a court of justice. But there are many offenses against morality and religion which are not cognizable in courts of justice. For such offense, a man is answerable only to his God, and not to the laws of his country. "The materiality of the false oath used for the legal purpose intended.[22] It is not necessary that the oath be required by statute law,[23] it being sufficient if it is required under decisions of the courts, which constitute a part of the laws pursuant to which a sworn statement must be made in order to constitute perjury.[24]

An oath authorized by necessary implication may serve as the basis of a prosecution for perjury.[25]

If an oath is permitted, although not required by statute, intentional false swearing therein is perjury.[26]

Oath forbidden by statute cannot serve as the basis for a charge of perjury.[27]

Oaths required by regulation of a governmental department, without aid of statute, are not so far authorized by law as to furnish the foundation of a prosecution for perjury.[28] But oaths required by departmental regulation pursuant to statute expressly or by necessary implication authorizing such regulation are so far authorized by law as to furnish adequate basis for a charge of perjury.[29]

Oath authorized by statute subsequent to enactment of the perjury statute may constitute perjury.[30]

[§ 50] (2) Laws of Foreign Jurisdiction. A willful false oath taken in one state pursuant to the laws of another may be the subject of a prosecution for perjury in the former.[31] But it has been held that an oath administered in a foreign country cannot serve as the predicate for perjury.[32]

[§ 51] (3) False Swearing.[33] A voluntary oath, not required by law, may constitute false swearing.[34] Under a statute providing for punishment of false swearing on a subject on which affiant can legally be sworn or on which he is required to be sworn,[35] the crime of false swearing cannot be committed in the absence of both of such statutory requirements;[36] but it has been said that, even though the subject was not one on which affiant could legally be sworn, the crime of false swearing may be committed if the false testimony was on a subject is . . . one of the essential elements of the crime of perjury." State v. Cline, 146 N. C. 640, 642, 61 SE 522.

"The facts sworn to may be material, and yet the false swearing be no perjury because the oath performed no office in the case, and was wholly unimportant and immaterial." Beecher v. Anderson, 45 Mich. 543, 552, 8 NW 539.

[b] Both the oath and the facts sworn to must be material. Peo. v. Almashy, 229 Mich. 227, 201 NW 231.

[c] Materiality in particular proceeding.—Not every false swearing constitutes perjury, even though it is as to material facts, and perjury cannot be predicated of a false oath which was not material in the particular proceeding in which it was taken. Peo. v. Millsap, 85 Cal. A. 732, 260 P 378.

[d] Verified answer in chancery.—"Under the late act, an affidavit of the truth of an answer in Chancery, has no legal effect, unless the bill expressly calls for such answer on oath. Unless called for on oath, the affidavit of the truth of the answer is wholly immaterial; it neither benefits the respondent. . . [nor] injures the complainant. The answer has the same effect, and nothing more, than it would have had, had it not been sworn to." Silver v. State, 17 Oh. 365, 368.

22. Langford v. State, 9 Tex. A. 283, 287.

"We are not to understand that the law must require the defendant, or any particular individual, to make the oath; but, if the law requires such an instrument to be sworn to (before it can have a legal standing) by any person, then, if taken, it would be under circumstances required by law." Langford v. State, supra.

25. U. S. v. Nelson, 199 Fed. 464, 472.

"Nor is it essential to the offense of perjury that the oath falsely taken should be particularly pointed out or directly prescribed by express statute. It is sufficient if, indirectly or by necessary implication, the laws of the United States require or permit the oath to be taken." U. S. v. Nelson, supra.

[a] Oath in discretion of administering official.—Under a statute providing that, if a county clerk is in doubt as to the true age of a party applying for a marriage license, he may require an affidavit to be made on the subject, an oath required on such subject by a clerk in doubt as to the age is authorized by law so as to constitute a valid basis for a charge of perjury. Cox v. State, 164 Ark. 126, 261 SW 303.

27. Biard v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. 440, 113 SW 275.

[a] Illustration.—Where a statute provided that one accused of crime could not be compelled to make any preliminary statement, but that he might voluntarily do so if he desired, and that such voluntary statement should be signed but not sworn to, and should be admissible as evidence, and accused made such a statement and swore to it, the falsity thereof could not constitute perjury because the oath was taken contrary to the law governing voluntary statements of this character. "By the very terms of the statute it is provided that said statement shall not be sworn to by him. The statute prohibiting the justice of the peace from swearing him to a voluntary statement, if he swears him to it, then he performs an illegal act, provided it is a voluntary statement. If it is not a voluntary statement, then certainly the utmost the State could insist upon would be a prosecution for false swearing." Biard v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. 440, 442, 113 SW 275.

[a] For instance, under a statute providing that false statements under oaths authorized by law shall be perjury, the fact that the false oath prosecuted was not authorized at the date of the enactment of the perjury statute is no defense, since the latter should be construed as applying to all oaths authorized by law at the time of their administration, and applies as much to oaths authorized by statutes passed after its enactment as to oaths authorized at the time of its enactment. U. S. v. Nihols, 27 F. Cas. No. 15,880, 4 McLean 23.

[§ 52] (4) Second Degree Perjury. A statute, defining second degree perjury as a knowingly false statement made under oath by "a volunteer,"[38] has been construed as rendering second degree perjury false swearing in any matter whatsoever,[39] even though the oath was not required by law.[40] Courts construing this statute have stated that second degree perjury is equivalent to the crime called "false swearing" in other jurisdictions.[41]

[§ 53] b. Matter or Proceeding in Which Statement Is Made[42]—(1) General Rule—(a) At Common Law. At common law a charge of perjury can be predicated only upon an oath administered in a judicial proceeding,[43] or one of like nature.[44] But it has been said that an oath is administered in a judicial proceeding if it is administered under authority of the court,[45] and that it is not necessary that the proceeding shall be before a judicial tribunal, but it suffices to render a false oath perjury that it be taken in a proceeding in a course of justice.[46]

Statements made in the absence of the presiding judicial officer are not made in the course of judicial proceedings, and cannot be perjury.[47]

[§ 54] (b) Under Statute—aa. Declaratory of Common Law. Under statutes declaratory of the common law,[48] or punishing perjury without defining it,[49] the offense is limited to false oaths in judicial proceedings.[50] It has been said that the phrase "judicial proceeding" refers to proceedings held under the laws of the state.[51]

Unauthorized judge. A proceeding is not judicial if held before a judge without authority to preside over the case in question.[52]

Continuance. The fact that the case is continued because of accused's false statement does not prevent the statement from occurring at a stage in judicial proceedings.[53]

Testimony taken during the absence of the presiding judicial officer ordinarily is not taken in the course of judicial proceedings, and cannot constitute [a] "The plain purpose of . . . [the statute] is the prevention by punishment of reckless, voluntary, false swearing, upon the faith of which others may act to their injury, as well as to prevent false swearing in extrajudicial proceedings or investigations, and in proceedings or investigations authorized by law held by quasi judicial boards, committees and the like having the power to compel the attendance of witnesses. The legislature evidently recognized that there is as much moral turpitude and may be as great resulting injury in the one case as the other. When the extensive use of sworn statements and affidavits in the business world, though not required by law, is remembered, when the prior law, the mischief and the remedy are considered, it is clear that the legislature used the broad language of our statute advisedly to the end that the sanctity of the oath might be preserved and that no wilfully false oath concerning any matter whatsoever might be used to another's detriment with impunity." Poulter v. State, 70 Tex. Cr. 197, 157 SW 166.

False statement on motion for continuance as constituting perjury see perjury.[54] But under statutes permitting examination of a witness out of court by consent of the parties,[55] it has been held that perjury may be committed on an examination not in the presence of the presiding judicial officer.[56]

False swearing otherwise than in judicial proceedings is punished generally as a distinct offense.[57]

[§ 55] bb. Modifying Common Law. Under statutes modifying the common law in this respect,[58] the crime of perjury has been extended so as to include false oaths authorized by law and legally administered irrespective of whether or not they were taken in the course of judicial proceedings.[59] But even under the latter type of statute the proceeding in which the oath is administered must be one authorized by law,[60] and one in which the administration of an oath is also authorized.[61] Under a statute punishing as perjury false swearing in a "proceeding before a court, tribunal or officer," the statement need not be made in a suit or action in order to constitute perjury.[62]

[§ 56] cc. Offense Distinct from Perjury.[63] Under statutes[64] false swearing otherwise than in judicial proceedings is often punishable as a distinct offense.[65] A statute punishing the making of any false and sworn certificate, affidavit, or statement of any nature, for any purpose,[66] has been construed as making it criminal to swear falsely in any legitimate affair or transaction affecting the rights of individuals or the welfare of the public.[67]

In Canada, under a statute providing that a statement made under oath, affirmation, or solemn declaration, and required or authorized by law, which would amount to perjury if made in judicial proceedings, shall be an indictable offense,[68] a statutory declaration authorized by the Canada Evidence Act[69] is a crime.[70] and Depositions[71]—(a) In General. Perjury may be assigned upon false testimony in the giving of a deposition authorized by law.[72] It has been held that a statute punishing a false "deposition" as perjury[73] does not include false "affidavits;"[74] but there is authority to the contrary.[75]

[§ 58] (b) Intent and Use or Delivery. In order that a false affidavit, certificate, or deposition may constitute perjury or false swearing,[76] it must be made with the intent that it shall be uttered or published as true.[77] In the absence of statute to the contrary,[78] the crime is complete the moment an affidavit is made with the requisite intent.[79] It is ordinarily[80] immaterial that the instrument was never used for the purpose intended,[81] or was insufficient for such purpose,[82] or that it failed to effectuate the particular purpose of affiant.[83]

Under statutes declaring that the making of a false and sworn written statement of this character is complete when it is delivered by accused to some other person with intent that it be uttered or published as true,[84] the mere taking of the false oath is not perjury.[85] But, in the absence of actual use, it must also appear that accused delivered the affidavit[86] with the statutory intent, such delivery being essential to complete the "making" of the instrument.[87] But under statutes not expressly or impliedly requiring either use or delivery for use,[88] perjury may be committed by a false affidavit which was neither used nor delivered for use.[89]

[§ 59] (c) Defects and Irregularities.[90] An unauthorized affidavit cannot constitute perjury.[91] But false affidavits may constitute perjury, even though so far defective as to prevent their introduction as evidence.[92] While it has been held that, where a deposition is illegal because not taken as authorized, perjury cannot be assigned thereon,[93] it has been held that irregularities in the taking of depositions will not necessarily preclude conviction of perjury for their falsity.[94]

[§ 60] (d) Incomplete Statements. A complete statement may support a charge of perjury if falsely sworn to either before or after it has been reduced to writing;[95] but an incomplete statement made, reduced to writing, sworn to by one person, and thereafter completed by another without reswearing the former, cannot constitute an indictable offense.[96]

[§ 61] c. Jurisdiction of Matter or Proceeding[97]—(1) Necessity. In the absence of some statute changing or modifying the rule,[98] it is well settled that to constitute the crime of perjury[99] or false swearing[1] it is essential that the false statement be made in a proceeding or with respect to a matter within the jurisdiction of the court, tribunal, or officer before or by whom the matter may be considered. It must further appear that the person assuming to act was an incumbent of the judicial or other office having jurisdiction over the matter or proceeding,[2] and that the tribunal or officer was competent to act.[3] Even though the presiding officer has jurisdiction of the general matter or proceeding, perjury cannot be assigned on testimony as to matters not within the scope of such matter or proceeding.[4]

"It cannot be controverted that to constitute perjury it must be shown that the false swearing occurred before a court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the matter under investigation." State v. Lawson, 98 N. J. L. 593, 594, 121 A 705 [aff 100 N. J. L. 185, 124 A 926]. To same effect State v. Mandehr, 168 Minn. 139, 209 NW 750.

[a] Reason for rule.—"The administration of an oath in a case over which the court has no jurisdiction is like every other part of the proceeding, a mere nullity." McClannohan v. Com., 10 Ky. Op. 72, 73.

[b] Proceedings before magistrate's court.—State v. Lawson, 98 N. J. L. 593, 121 A 705 [aff 100 N. J. L. 185, 124 A 926]. See infra note [c] (1). Magistrate's hearing as a proceeding in which perjury may be committed see infra § 69.

(Ont.) 34. (2) The fact that the grand jury which had indicted defendant for perjury had previously indicted him for bigamy, and that both charges involved the fact that defendant married a certain woman on a specified date, did not deprive the court of jurisdiction to try such perjury charge, so as to make it impossible for accused to have committed perjury on such trial. Peo. v. Collins, 6 Cal. A. 492, 92 P 513. (3) A tax board of equalization is acting within its statutory jurisdiction in conducting an investigation as to whether property has been omitted from tax lists, so that a false and sworn statement in such proceedings is perjury. "Before punishment for false swearing can be imposed it is requisite that the matter concerning which the alleged false testimony is given must be 'judicially pending' and that the evidence must be given on a subject in which the defendant can be 'legally sworn.' Both of those requisite elements were lacking." Smiddy v. Com., supra (construing St. § 1174).

[a] Rule applied.—Defendant was not guilty of false swearing even if his testimony in a trial in a county court for drunkenness was false, as drunkenness is not a public offense since the enactment of Rash-Gullion Act (1922) c 33, and the court was therefore without jurisdiction. Harkleroad v. Com., 207 Ky. 552, 269 SW 724.

[b] Proceedings before magistrate.—(1) The rule has been applied in proceeedings before a magistrate (Smiddy v. Com., 214 Ky. 100, 282 SW 774) (2) or police court (Smiddy v. Com., supra).

[c] Common-law crime of taking false oath.—Where magistrates were authorized by statute to administer oaths only in duly authorized proceedings, and where they held a meeting to consider issuance of liquor licenses at a time other than that prescribed by statute for such meetings, the meeting was without jurisdiction and the oath there administered was without authority of law, and could not serve as a basis for a prosecution for the common-law misdemeanor of taking a false oath. Rex v. Shaw, 104 L. T. Rep. N. S. 112.

[b] In Canada (1) under Cr. Code § 145, punishing perjury in a judicial proceeding, and declaring that every proceeding is judicial within the meaning of the section which is held before any person acting as a court, justice, or tribunal having power to hold such judicial proceeding, whether duly constituted or not, and whether the proceeding was duly instituted or not before such court or person so as to authorize it or him to hold the proceeding, and although such proceeding was held in a wrong place or was otherwise invalid, it was held perjury to give false testimony before a justice of the peace holding a judgment proceeding under a provincial law, although the justice was by the terms of that law disqualified from hearing the charge because he was not a resident of the county in which the alleged offense took place. Drew v. Rex, 33 Can. S. C. 228, 6 Can CrCas 424 [dism app 11 Que. K. B. 477, 6 CanCrCas 241]. (2) By force of Cr. Code § 171 perjury can be committed in proceedings of an election registration board, notwithstanding irregular appointment of the registrar, the proceedings being none the less judicial. Rex v. 4. Peo. v. Hebberd, 96 Misc. 617, 162 NYS 80.

[a] Commissioner going beyond statutory jurisdiction.—An examination of a witness in an investigation by a commissioner appointed by the governor under the Executive Law, with respect to matters not within the lawful scope of the investigation, is beyond the jurisdiction of the commissioner and consequently perjury cannot be assigned respecting testimony on such matters. jection for defects or irregularities of a nonjurisdictional character,[7] even though the irregularities are such as may require reversal on appeal.[8] If the court has jurisdiction to take cognizance of the case in the first instance, perjury may be committed therein, even though facts later appear defeating jurisdiction,[9] as in the case of a divorce proceeding where residence essential to jurisdiction is shown in the pleadings but disproved in the testimony.[10]

Waiver. Nonjurisdictional defects waived by the parties will not preclude a charge of perjury.[11]

[§ 63] (b) Particular Defects or Irregularities.[12] In accordance with the general rule that nonjurisdictional defects or irregularities will not preclude conviction for perjury,[13] it has been held that perjury may be committed in the matter or proceeding involved notwithstanding irregularities such as a wrong date of original entry in the final proof of a homestead claim;[14] an invalid warrant in bail proceedings;[15] error in the order of introduction of testimony;[16] failure to swear the jury on the trial in which the false testimony was given;[17] defendant's failure to plead;[18] erroneous refusal of a continuance;[19] and trial without a jury in a case where defendant was entitled thereto.[20]

[a] Improper arrest.—Even though a defendant in a criminal investigation was improperly arrested and brought before the police court, the latter had jurisdiction to hear and determine the case so that perjury could be committed in such proceeding. Gardner v. State, 80 Ark. 264, 97 SW 48.
[b] Invalidity of an ordinance under which a trial is had does not destroy the jurisdiction of the court to hear and determine the case, including the question of the invalidity of the ordinance, and so perjury may be committed in such a trial. State v. Mandehr, 168 Minn. 139, 209 NW 750.
[c] Jurisdiction dependent on diversity of citizenship.—False swearing by a witness on hearing of a motion for preliminary injunction in a federal court constituted perjury, where the bill alleged facts showing diversity of citizenship which gave the court jurisdiction, although the testimony developed an identity of interest between complainant and one of defendants which required the latter's alignment with complainant and defeated jurisdiction. arrest of judgment,[22] or should have been quashed,[23] or was subsequently adjudged insufficient on appeal.[24] The entire absence of the necessary form of pleading will not prevent conviction of perjury for false testimony in a criminal trial actually held before a court having jurisdiction of the offense and of defendant where the latter interposed no objection.[25]

[§ 64] (3) Jurisdictional Defects.[26] In accordance with the rule that the court, tribunal, or officer must have jurisdiction,[27] it is settled that perjury or false swearing[28] cannot be committed in proceedings void for want of jurisdiction.[29]

Particular defects or irregularities held jurisdictional include taking evidence on a felony trial in the absence of defendant;[30] holding a hearing on an application for letters of administration while the probate of the will is still unrevoked;[31] proceeding with a trial after the action has abated;[32] conducting a bastardy proceeding on an affidavit showing on its face that the mother is married instead of unmarried as required by the bastardy statute;[33] holding proceedings before a justice of the peace acting outside his territorial jurisdiction;[34] and a sworn accusation made to commence a prosecution, which is deficient in facts required by statute to be shown to give the tribunal jurisdiction.[35]

[§ 65] d. Particular Matters or Proceedings[36]— (1) Acknowledgment and Execution of Instrument.[37] Under statutes extending common-law perjury to include extrajudicial oaths,[38] it has been held to be perjury for a person to swear falsely to his identity as grantor on examination by an officer authorized to administer the oath on taking the acknowledgment of a deed;[39] or to swear falsely to the execution of a deed as an attesting witness.[40]

[§ 66] (2) Bankruptcy; Insolvency.[41] In construing the Bankruptcy Act of 1898 it has been held that, irrespective of the specific penalty for a false oath therein imposed,[42] false swearing in bankruptcy proceedings constitutes the distinct crime of perjury.[43] Taking a false oath, under a state insolvent

[b] Collateral attack.—Where court in which indictments were found for perjury had jurisdiction of subject matter and of person of defendant, and in pursuance of its general powers sustained sufficiency of indictments, they could not be made subject of collateral attack in subsequent prosecution for perjury, based on defendant's testimony in former prosecutions. [a] Under the Bankruptcy Act of 1800 (1) it was held that false swearing in bankruptcy proceedings was not perjury. Anonymous, 1 F. Cas. No. 475, 1 Wash. C. C. 84. (2) Repeal of the act barred a prosecution for false statements made under the act before its repeal, whether such prosecution was for an offense under the act, under penal statutes, or at common law. U. S. v. Passmore, 27 F. Cas. No. 16,005, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 372, 1 L. ed. 871. (3) Where defendant swore falsely in a bankruptcy proceeding while there was in force a bankruptcy act providing punishment for false oaths in such proceedings and also another general statute covering perjury and inflicting a heavier punishment, he could have been punished under the first statute but not under the second, and on repeal of the first statute he remained innocent under the second, the general perjury statute, and could not be convicted under the first because it had been repealed. Anonymous, supra.

[b] Under the act of 1841 (1) it was perjury for a bankrupt to swear falsely to his schedule (U. S. v. Nichols, 27 F. Cas. No. 15,880, 4 McLean 23. Contra U. S. v. Dickey, Morr. (Iowa) 412), (2) or to make false statements in regard to it in answer to interrogatories proposed to him in his examination (U. S. v. Dickey, supra).

debtor's act,[44] is perjury both at common law and under the statutes.[45] One willfully omitting property from his schedule in insolvency was held guilty of perjury.[46]

In England perjury may be committed in proceedings before commissioners in bankruptcy.[47]

[§ 67] (3) Grand Jury Proceedings.[48] A false and sworn statement before a grand jury acting within its authority may be perjury[49] both under the common-law rule restricting perjury to judicial oaths,[50] and under statutes including both judicial and nonjudicial oaths,[51] since a grand jury is regarded as a competent tribunal[52] and a branch of judicial justice.[53] But false swearing respecting a matter as to which the grand jury had no authority to conduct an investigation is not perjury.[54]

Presence of an unauthorized person at a grand jury proceeding does not render it void so as to prevent false swearing before the grand jury from being perjury.[55]

A witness unlawfully compelled to testify with respect to a matter that tends to incriminate him cannot be convicted of perjury if the grand jury investigation was directed against him, as in that case the oath could not be legally administered to him.[56]

[§ 68] (4) License Application. Under general rules, and subject to their qualifications, above stated,[57] perjury or false swearing, as the case may be,[58] may be predicated on a false affidavit or statement made under oath on an application for a liquor license,[59] a marriage license,[60] a motor vehicle or driver's license,[61] or a physician's license.[62]

"False swearing in bankruptcy proceedings is perjury, nothing more or less. Section 5392 (section 125 of the Penal Code) clearly covers that and every other way of committing the crime. Section 29 of the Bankruptcy Act simply singles out that one form for a milder punishment. Two sections cover the offense, one generically, the other specifically. So the specific section has effect only in restricting punishment. Combined, the effect is exactly as if there were only one section denouncing and punishing perjury." Epstein v. U. S., supra.

60. [a] May be predicated.—(1) Under statutes extending the common-law rule so as to include false oaths in extrajudicial proceedings, a false statement in a sworn application for a marriage license may constitute perjury. Code § 118, defining perjury does not limit the oath to court proceedings and in view of Civ. Code § 69, stating requisites for issuance of license to marry a female under the age of eighteen years, an information alleging that defendant, to obtain a license, made an affidavit that the female was then of the age of nineteen years, well knowing that statement of age was false, stated a public offense, namely that of perjury. Peo. v. Torterice, 66 Cal. A. 115, 225 P 760. (3) Under a section of the Domestic Relations Law expressly providing that willful false swearing upon an application for a marriage license respecting material facts as to the competency of persons to marry shall be perjury, it has been said that the only punishment for a marriage of persons under age is that imposed by such section. Kellogg v. Kellogg, 122 Misc. 734, 203 NYS 757. (4) Under statutes creating the distinct crime of false swearing with respect to oaths in extrajudicial proceedings, a false statement in a sworn application for a marriage license may constitute the crime of false swearing. Harkreader v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 243, 33 SW 117, 60 AmSR 40; Steber v. State, 23 Tex. A. 176, 4 SW 880; Davidson v. State, 22 Tex. A. 372, 3 SW 662.

[b] May not be predicated.—(1) Under the common-law doctrine that the false statement must be made in a judicial proceeding, a false statement made in a sworn application for a marriage license is not perjury (Harkreader v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 243, 33 SW 117, 60 AmSR 40; Steber v. State, 23 Tex. A. 176, 4 SW 880; Davidson v. State, 22 Tex. A. 372, 3 SW 662; Com. v. Williamson, 4 Gratt. 61. [a] May be predicated.—(1) False swearing in an application for the registration of a motor vehicle, or the issuance of a license to drive the same, may be punishable as perjury under statutes extending common-law perjury to include nonjudicial oaths (Peo. v. Lorenzo, 233 NYS 337) (2) or as a distinct offense under a statute relating specifically to false oaths in such applications (Peo. v. Lorenzo, supra). (3) And it has been held that the enactment of a statute specifically punishing a false oath in such a proceeding does not impliedly repeal an earlier general perjury statute in respect to its application to such false oaths. Peo. v. Lorenzo, supra.

62. [§ 69] (5) Magistrate's Hearing.[63] A false statement made on a preliminary hearing before a committing magistrate may constitute perjury,[64] because such a hearing is ordinarily regarded as a "proceeding"[65] or "judicial proceeding"[66] as these terms are used in perjury statutes. Since the distinct crime of false swearing is ordinarily confined to nonjudicial oaths,[67] a false statement on such a preliminary hearing does not constitute the crime of false swearing.[68]

If a complaint fails to charge any crime against defendant, false testimony at a preliminary hearing thereon before a magistrate is not perjury.[69] Nor is it perjury to made a false affidavit which charges no offense.[70]

An unauthorized oath before a magistrate cannot constitute perjury.[71]

Mayor's court. Under a statute making a mayor a court with the jurisdiction of a magistrate,[72] perjury may be committed in proceedings before a mayor's court.[73]

[§ 70] (6) Public Land Office.[74] Under the statute making perjury a false statement under an oath authorized by the laws of the United States,[75] false and sworn statements made in proceedings before the United States land office may constitute perjury.[76] False swearing in such proceedings has also been held perjury under a statute[77] expressly declaring the making of false affidavits or the giving of false testimony in or to be used in land offices, in connection with the disposal of public land, to be perjury.[78]

An unauthorized oath in a proceeding before the land office cannot be perjury.[79]

"A charge of perjury may be based upon § 125 of the Criminal Code where the affidavit is required either expressly by an act of Congress or by an authorized regulation of the General Land Office." U. S. v. Smull, 236 U. S. 405, 409, 35 SCt 349, 59 L. ed. 641.

[a] Reason for rule.—"We have . . . a general grant of authority to the Land Department to prescribe appropriate regulations for the disposition of the public land; a specific act of Congress authorizing contests before the local land offices in cases of preëmption; rules and regulations prescribed by the Land Department for contests in all cases of the disposition of public lands, including both preëmption and homestead entries; and the frequent recognition by acts of Congress of such contests in respect to homestead entries. Clearly then, within the scope of § 5392, the local land officers in hearing and deciding upon a contest with respect to a homestead entry constituted a competent tribunal, and the contest so pending before them was a case in which the laws of the United States authorized an oath to be administered. This is not a case in which the violation of a mere regulation of a department is adjudged a crime." Caha v. U. S., 152 U. S. 211, 218, 14 SCt 513, 38 L. ed. 415.

[b] Soldier's homestead.—Where, by regulation of the land office relative to acquisition of a soldier's homestead, an oath was required to establish evidence of facts necessary to be proved under the homestead statute, the oath was one required by a law of the United States, and therefore perjury could be predicated on its falsity. U. S. v. Morehead, 243 U. S. 607, 37 SCt 458, 61 L. ed. 926.

[a] Homestead claimant's statement as to residence and cultivation.—Where a homestead claimant made a false affidavit as to residence and cultivation in a paper filed pursuant to a regulation of the land department, but under statute such facts could be proved only by two disinterested witnesses and not by claimant himself, the false affidavit was not perjury because the oath thereto was not required or authorized by law. U. S. v. George, 228 U. S. 14, 33 SCt 412, 57 L. ed. 712.

[b] Congress cannot confer on the secretary of the interior or commissioner of the land office power to make rules and regulations, such as prescribing by whom the oath is to be administered to one making preëmption entry, or the facts to be contained in the affidavit, so as to make it perjury for the preëmptor to make a false affidavit, when the facts sworn to are not required by statute to be sworn to, and the statute does not authorize the oath to be administered by the person who administers it. U. S. v. Bedgood, 49 Fed. 54.

[a] Affidavit of a deputy sheriff for expenses in conveying a witness from one county to another under Acts (1891) p 138, providing that for such service the sheriff shall be entitled to his expenses, the amount to be stated by him under oath, is "an oath necessary for the prosecution of a private right," within Pen. Code art 188, declaring that a false statement under oath for the prosecution or defense of any private right is perjury, although not an oath "in a judicial proceeding," within art 192, providing that a false oath in a judicial proceeding shall constitute perjury. Shely v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 190, 32 SW 901.

[b] Clerk of court.—The account of services rendered the United States by a clerk of the district court is a except where made under oath not required by law.[82] Sometimes such a false oath is made punishable as a distinct offense and does not fall within the statute punishing perjury.[83]

[§ 72] (8) Reports and Examinations Respecting Banks and Other Corporations or Associations. Under statutes extending common-law perjury to include false oaths in extrajudicial proceedings,[84] false swearing in the report of a bank,[85] or other corporation,[86] or association,[87] may constitute perjury. It has been held that such a report may be perjury despite the existence of other statutes specifically punishing false reports of this nature.[88] False swearing by an officer of a fraternal beneficial society on his examination before a state superintendent of insurance is perjury.[89] A false oath as to his ownership of stock, etc., by one qualifying as a national bank director, may constitute perjury.[90] On an indictment against an officer of a bank for perjury in falsely making affidavit to the truth of the report of the bank's condition, defendant cannot object that the affidavits of other persons to the report are defective, and therefore not legal, so long as his own affidavit was in compliance with the law.[91]

Foreign corporation. Under a statute providing that a false oath "required by law" may be perjury,[92] false swearing before a local notary as to a corporate report required by the law of a foreign jurisdiction may constitute perjury.[93]

Oath not required by law. False statements in bank reports made under oath not required by law[94] cannot constitute perjury,[95] although, under statutes dividing perjury into degrees and making second degree perjury akin to false swearing,[96] they may constitute second degree perjury.[97]

[§ 73] (9) Surety's Justification.[98] If a surety on a bail bond or recognizance testifies falsely and knowingly in an affidavit or on examination as to his ownership of property or other qualifications, he is guilty of perjury both at common law and under the statutes,[99] and the same is true of one who swears

"declaration" or "certificate" within the meaning of U. S. Rev. St. (1878) § 5392 (USCA tit 18 § 231) making the false verification thereof perjury. U. S. v. Ambrose, 108 U. S. 336, 2 SCt 682, 27 L. ed. 746.

[c] Pension claim.—The offense of perjury as defined by U. S. Rev. St. § 5392 (USCA tit 18 § 231) may be predicated upon an affidavit to support a pension claim sworn to before a justice of the peace. U. S. v. Boggs, 31 Fed. 337.

[d] Public school teacher.—(1) Where a teacher who had taught a number of days in excess of the regular term, for which he could not legally receive compensation, exaggerated the number of scholars at the next term, so as to entitle him to an amount sufficient to pay for the extra days' teaching, and made oath to such report, it was held that he was guilty of perjury. Vance v. State, 62 Miss. 137. (2) Where a public school teacher, on making affidavit as required by law to the check drawn by the trustees on the county treasurer for his pay, makes a false statement, he is guilty of perjury under Pen. Code art 188, defining perjury as a false statement made under the sanction of an oath under circumstances in which an oath is required by law. O'Bryan v. State, 27 Tex. A. 339, 11 SW 443.

Tenn.—State v. Wilson, 87 Tenn. 693, 11 SW 792.

Tex.—Warren v. State, 57 Tex. Cr. 262, 122 SW 541.

[a] Nature of proceeding.—(1) An inquiry by a United States commissioner as to the solvency of a surety on a bail bond for the appearance of an accused before the district court is a judicial proceeding, and a willfully false oath made by the surety therein constitutes perjury. "The proceeding in which an inquiry is had as to the solvency of the surety is judicial." Hodgkinson v. U. S., 5 F.

falsely on justifying as surety on an appeal bond or recognizance.[1] So, under the act of congress extending the crime of perjury,[2] one may be guilty of that offense in swearing falsely as to his qualifications to become a surety on a distiller's bond,[3] or a match stamp bond,[4] before an internal revenue collector.

False swearing. It has been held that swearing falsely on application to serve as surety on a replevin bond is not an oath made in a judicial proceeding, but may constitute the distinct crime of false swearing.[5] On the other hand, a false oath in an application to serve as bail bondsman is in a judicial proceeding, and therefore perjury,[6] but not false swearing.[7]

[§ 74] (10) Tax Proceedings.[8] Under statutes extending common-law perjury to include false oaths in extrajudicial proceedings,[9] perjury may be committed in tax proceedings or returns,[10] such as proceedings before a tax board.[11]

Income and excess profits. A false statement in a sworn income[12] or excess profit[13] tax return may constitute perjury. A provision of the income tax statute punishing any attempt to evade the tax does not prevent a false statement in a tax return from being perjury,[14] since the two offenses are distinct.[15] Perjury may be committed by swearing falsely to an income tax return with the necessary intent,[16] even though the false return is not in fact used.[17]

[§ 75] (11) Verified Pleadings.[18] Perjury may be committed in the verification of a pleading,[19] even when made upon belief.[20] It has been both affirmed[21] and denied[22] that the verification must be compulsory in order to serve as the predicate for perjury. Perjury may be assigned upon a false oath to an answer in chancery,[23] provided the bill called for an answer under oath.[24] It is equally perjury to make a false charge or averment in the charging part as to make a false statement in the stating part of a bill.[25]

[§ 76] (12) Other Matters or Proceedings. In accordance with general rules, and subject to their qualifications,[26] perjury or false swearing, as the case may be,[27] may or may not be predicated on an affidavit for attachment,[28] certiorari,[29] change of venue,[30] continuance,[31] writ of habeas cor-

[a] Distinction stated.—"The offenses defined in the two statutes are not identical. They are entirely distinct in point of law, even when they arise out of the same transaction or act. Each involves an element not found in the other. . . . The crime of perjury is complete when the oath is taken with the necessary intent, although the false affidavit is never used. . . . The making of a false affidavit, without presentation thereof, does not constitute an attempt to evade the tax law. . . . The crime of attempting to defeat or evade the Revenue Law may be committed without verification of a false tax return. Congress, having power to make both the false swearing and the use of the false affidavit punishable . . . did so. . . . The fact that perjury is a felony, while filing a false return is only a misdemeanor, presented no obstacle. . . . There is nothing in the history of the revenue legislation which should lead us to a different conclusion." U. S. v. Noveck, 273 U. S. 202, 206, 47 SCt 341, 71 L. ed. 610.

Eng.—Reg. v. Yates, C. & M. 132, 41 ECL 77.

"The verification to a pleading . . . is clearly an oath authorized by law." State v. Luper, supra.

20. State v. Luper, (Or.) 95 P 811.

[a] Divorce complaint sworn to be true as plaintiff "verily believed" in accordance with statutory requirement may constitute a basis for a charge of perjury. State v. Luper, (Or.) 95 P 811.

False statement of belief or opinion generally see supra § 12.

21. Peo. v. Millsap, 85 Cal. A. 732, 260 P 378; Beecher v. Anderson, 45 Mich. 543, 8 NW 539; Peo. v. Gaige, 26 Mich. 30; Silver v. State, 17 Oh. 365.

[a] For instance, false statements in a verified answer, which would have been as effective if unverified, cannot constitute perjury because the verification or oath is immaterial. Peo. v. Millsap, 85 Cal. A. 732, 260 P 378.

22. Lappley v. State, 170 Wis. 356, 174 NW 913, 7 ALR 1279.

[a] Reason for this view.—"It is argued that the verification by defendant of his complaint as a pleading in the civil action on which the charge is predicated was a wholly immaterial oath within the contemplation of the perjury statute, because under sec. 2665 pleadings may or may not be verified, and, whether verified or not, the facts therein stated to which defendant swore do not by operation of law make such oath a material matter or thing in such action. This claim wholly disregards the terms and significance of sec. 4471. A complaint in a civil action pending in a court having jurisdiction to hear the cause is a material matter in the proceeding, and an oath verifying it is one in regard to a matter before a court and is authorized by law." Lappley v. State, 170 Wis. 356, 359, 174 NW 913, 7 ALR 1279.

[b] That verification of a complaint is optional does not prevent the oath thereto from being one authorized by law so that if false it may constitute perjury. Lappley v. State, 170 Wis. 356, 174 NW 913, 7 ALR 1279.

28. [a] May be predicated.—State v. Madigan, 57 Minn. 425, 59 NW 490.

29. [a] May be predicated.—Pratt v. Price, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 127.

30. [a] May not be predicated.—It has been said that perjury cannot be assigned upon an alleged false affidavit as to the prejudice of a judge in support of a motion for a change of venue, because subjecting such an affiant to a possible prosecution for perjury would nullify the constitutional guaranty of an impartial trial. Ex p. Ellis, 3 Okl. Cr. 220, 105 P 184, 25 LRANS 653, AnnCas1912A 863.

31. [a] May be predicated.—(1) False swearing to a material point in an affidavit for the continuance of a

pus,[32] injunction,[33] new trial,[34] passport,[35] search warrant,[36] or service of process by publication;[37] or on an affidavit in proceedings by a landlord to remove his tenant;[38] or an affidavit to an account,[39] to secure an appeal,[40] or to verify a chattel mortgage;[41] or on a false answer under oath as to the competency of a juror;[42] or on a false statement at a coroner's inquest,[43] in an application for a civil service examination,[44] in contempt proceedings,[45] in proceedings before fence viewers,[46] in proceedings before a fire marshal,[47] in proceedings before a legislative body,[48] in proceedings before a local marine board,[49] in proceedings before an ecclesiastical tribunal,[50] in proceedings before a military tribunal,[51] in proceedings cause may constitute perjury. Holmes v. U. S., 269 Fed. 96; State v. Winstandley, 151 Ind. 316, 51 NE 92; State v. Flagg, 27 Ind. 24; State v. Johnson, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 49; State v. Shupe, 16 Iowa 36, 85 AmD 485; State v. Matlock, 48 La. Ann. 663, 19 S 669. (2) By the common law and the law of Texas when it was admitted as a state, applications for continuance in criminal cases were required to be supported by oath, and a prosecution for perjury under Rev. St. § 5392 may be based on a false oath to such an application in a federal court in Texas, which follows that procedure. Holmes v. U. S., 269 Fed. 96.

Effect of continuance on perjury committed in testifying see supra § 54 text and note 53.

32. [a] May be predicated.—White v. State, 9 Miss. 149.

33. [a] May be predicated.—Rex v. White, M. & M. 271, 22 ECL 519.

34. [a] May be predicated.—(1) A false affidavit in support of a petition for a new trial may constitute perjury. Arnold v. State, (Okl. Cr.) 132 P 1123; State v. Chandler, 42 Vt. 446. (2) Under statutes extending common-law perjury to include nonjudicial oaths (see supra § 55), a false affidavit taken in advance of a motion for a new trial to be used thereon may constitute perjury (State v. Varnado, 154 La. 575, 97 S 865).

[b] For example, the making of a false affidavit before a notary public for use on a motion for a new trial in a criminal case constituted perjury, even though the motion had not been presented to the court when the affidavit was made. State v. Varnado, 154 La. 575, 97 S 865.

[c] Under a false swearing statute providing that if any person on any subject on which he can legally be sworn shall willfully and knowingly swear false he shall be imprisoned, one making a false affidavit in support of a motion for a new trial may be convicted of the crime of false swearing. Neal v. Com., 217 Ky. 334, 335, 289 SW 242 ("statements contained in an affidavit supporting a defendant's motion for a new trial are subjects concerning which the affiant can legally be sworn").

35. [a] May not be predicated.—A prosecution for perjury in connection with a passport application cannot be predicated upon an unauthorized oath. U. S. v. Robertson, 257 Fed. 195.

[b] Length of time witness knew applicant.—The presidential rule for the issuance of passports, requiring an affidavit from a credible witness who has known the applicant two years, does not require the affiant to swear to acquaintance with the applicant, although that is in the form prescribed by the secretary of state, and making false affidavit as to acquaintance is not perjury because not in a case in which a law authorizes an oath to be administered, within Criminal Code § 125 (USCA tit 18 § 231). U. S. v. Robertson, 257 Fed. 195.

36. [a] May be predicated.—(1) Carpenter v. State, 5 Miss. 163, 34 AmD 116. (2) An affidavit to procure a search warrant, charging a felony, is, if false, perjury, although it charges the felony to no particular person. Carpenter v. State, supra.

37. [a] May be predicated.—An affidavit of nonresidence to secure an order for service by publication sworn to before the action has been begun, by filing the bill, may constitute perjury. Clarke v. Wayne Cir. Judge, 193 Mich. 33, 159 NW 387 (construing Howell St. Annot. § 4719).

38. [a] May be predicated.—Sewell v. State, 61 Ga. 496.

39. [a] May be predicated.—A false affidavit to an account for the purpose of having it passed by the orphans' court may constitute perjury. U. S. v. Thomas, 28 F. Cas. No. 16,475, 3 Cranch C. C. 293.

40. [a] May not be predicated.—Perjury cannot be assigned upon an affidavit to secure an appeal that the appeal is not taken for purposes of delay. Jackson v. State, 90 Ark. 577, 119 SW 1129.

[b] Reason for rule.—Although Const. art 7 § 42 provides for appeals from justices of the peace, and Kirby Dig. § 4666 provides for an affidavit that the appeal is not taken for delay, perjury cannot be assigned on such an affidavit, as the good faith of the applicant is not susceptible of that degree of proof requisite to constitute perjury, and if the affidavit is made by a third party it would at most be a mere expression of opinion that the applicant took the appeal in good faith. Jackson v. State, 90 Ark. 577, 119 SW 1129.

41. [a] May be predicated.—(1) Under statutes extending common-law perjury to include extrajudicial oaths (see supra § 55) a false affidavit pursuant to statutory requirements respecting verification of chattel mortgages (see Chattel Mortgages § 125) (2) may constitute perjury (State v. Estabrooks, 70 Vt. 412, 41 A 499).

Affidavits and similar instruments generally see supra §§ 57–60.

42. [a] May be predicated.—In re De Martini, 47 Cal. A. 228, 190 P 468; State v. Howard, 63 Ind. 502; Peo. v. Rendigs, 123 Misc. 32, 205 NYS 133; Finch v. U. S., 1 Okl. 396, 33 P 638; Hilliard v. State, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 648; State v. Wall, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 347; Com. v. Stockley, 10 Leigh (37 Va.) 678.

43. [a] May be predicated.—False swearing on an inquest before a deputy coroner may constitute perjury. Reg. v. Johnson, L. R. 2 C. C. 15.

44. [a] May be predicated.—A willfully false answer by the applicant to a question in an application for civil service examination may constitute perjury. U. S. v. Crandol, 233 Fed. 331; Johnson v. U. S., 26 App. (D. C.) 128 (holding it perjury under the federal statute for a civil service applicant to swear falsely as to whether he had ever been in government service and, if so, whether he resigned or was discharged).

45. [a] May be predicated.—(1) U. S. v. Dodge, 25 F. Cas. No. 14,975, 2 Gall. 313; Ex p. Biggers, 85 Fla. 322, 95 S 763; Ex p. Earman, 85 Fla. 297, 95 S 755, 31 ALR 1226; Ray v. State, 186 Ind. 396, 114 NE 866. (2) Even though of an irregular character. Ruch v. State, 111 Oh. St. 580, 146 NE 67.

[b] Irregularities waived.—Ruch v. State, 111 Oh. St. 580, 146 NE 67.

Jurisdictional and nonjurisdictional irregularities see supra §§ 62–64.

46. [a] May be predicated.—Jones v. Daniels, 15 Gray (Mass.) 438, 440 ("Perjury may be committed by a person testifying falsely and corruptly as a witness at a hearing before a board of fence-viewers legally assembled to adjudicate upon the rights of adjacent landowners as to their division fences").

47. [a] May be predicated.—Harris v. Peo., 64 N. Y. 148 [aff 4 Hun 1, 6 Thomps. & C. 206].

[b] May not be predicated.—But false testimony before such official pursuant to an unauthorized oath is not a criminal offense. Com. v. Ransdall, 153 Ky. 334, 155 SW 1117.

[c] Fire outside state.—Where a fire occurs outside the state a fire marshal is not authorized to investigate it, and consequently false and sworn statements in proceedings before a fire marshal investigating such a fire cannot constitute false swearing because the oath is neither legally administered nor on a subject as to which an oath is required. Com. v. Ransdall, 153 Ky. 334, 155 SW 1117.

48. [a] May be predicated.—(1) Under statutes extending common-law perjury to include extrajudicial oaths (see supra § 55), perjury may be predicated upon false swearing in proceedings before a legislative body (Ex p. McCarthy, 29 Cal. 395; Peo. v. Backer, 113 Misc. 400, 185 NYS 459), (2) even when held by a committee sitting by due authority after adjournment of the legislature (Peo. v. Backer, supra). (3) A witness before a joint legislative committee created by a concurrent resolution of the senate and assembly, empowered to function after the adjournment of the legislature, may be guilty of perjury in his testimony before it, given between sessions of the legislature. Peo. v. Backer, supra.

49. [a] May be predicated.—Reg. v. Tomlinson, L. R. 1 C. C. 49.

50. [a] May be predicated.—In a common-law jurisdiction taking cognizance of ecclesiastical courts (see Cognizance 11 C. J. p 948 note 43 [b], [c]; Religious Societies [34 Cyc 1182 et seq]) it would seem that perjury may be committed in proceedings before an ecclesiastical tribunal. See Chapman v. Gillet, 2 Conn. 40 (so holding in an action for slander in accusing a man of perjury before an ecclesiastical council).

51. See cases infra this note.

[a] Court-martial.—False swearing before a court-martial may constitute perjury. Reg. v. Heane, 4 B. & S. 947, 116 ECL 947, 122 Reprint 714. See State v. Gregory, 6 N. C. 69 (on a trial for perjury committed before a court-martial it is not necessary to produce the military commission of the presiding officer in order to prove the legality of the court-martial).

[b] Proceedings under draft acts.—(1) Perjury may be committed in proceedings under military draft acts pursuant to an oath authorized by regulations promulgated under such acts. Hardwick v. U. S., 257 Fed. 505, 168 CCA 509; U. S. v. Sonachall, 27 F. Cas. No. 16,352, 4 Biss. 425. (2) Under Selective Service Regulations (1917) §§ 91, 94, 95, a registrant who swore to the affidavit verifying his questionnaire, which falsely stated that he had a wife dependent on him for support, committed perjury, despite his claim that there is no statute authorizing such an oath, and no authorization by the regulations. Whiteside v. U. S., 257 Fed. 509, 168 CCA 513.

[c] Civil War draft.—U. S. v. Sonachall, 27 F. Cas. No. 16,352, 4 Biss. 425.

Authority of draft board officials to administer oath see infra § 87 text and note 28.

before a referee[52] or an arbitrator;[53] in proofs of loss under an insurance policy;[54] in a return under an oleomargarine act;[55] on a false statement or affidavit made in election proceedings or as to matters concerning an election;[56] on a false statement made at an examination for discovery before[57] or after[58] trial; or on false testimony, given instead of an affidavit, on a hearing to dissolve an injunction.[59]

Special statute authorizing oath. Under statutes extending common-law perjury to include nonjudicial oaths,[60] a false affidavit in extrajudicial proceedings under a special statute providing for proof by affidavit may constitute perjury.[61]

[§ 77] 8. Administration and Form of Oath—a. Actual Administration. It is essential to the commission of perjury and kindred crimes[62] that defendant shall have been sworn or affirmed.[63] In other words, to constitute a valid oath, for the falsity of which perjury will lie, there must be, in the presence of a person authorized to administer it,[64] an unequivocal act by which affiant consciously takes upon himself the obligation of an oath.[65] An oath not administered in respect of the facts stated can-

52. [a] May be predicated.—State v. Keene, 26 Me. 33; Bonner v. McPhail, 31 Barb. (N. Y.) 106 (holding, however, that an order of reference made after the report has been filed, with the consent of both parties that it be entered nunc pro tunc, will not relate back so as to give an extrajudicial oath the effect of an oath legally administered, on which a charge of perjury can be sustained).

53. [a] May be predicated where the investigation is of a matter submitted to arbitrators by rule of court. State v. Stephenson, 15 S. C. L. 165; Reg. v. Ball, 6 Cox C. C. 360.

[b] May not be predicated, it has been held, where the submission is not by rule of court. Mahan v. Berry, 5 Mo. 21.

[c] Arbitration under Workmen's Compensation Act.—(1) It has been held that false swearing in an arbitration before a judge under a workmen's compensation act is punishable as common-law perjury in a judicial proceeding (Rex v. Crossley, [1909] 1 K. B. 411) (2) and not as an offense under arbitration acts punishing false testimony before an arbitrator to whom a dispute is referred by consent (Rex v. Crossley, supra).

54. [a] May be predicated.—(1) False swearing in proofs of loss to an insurance company may be punishable as perjury under statutes extending common-law perjury to include extrajudicial oaths (Avery v. Ward, 150 Mass. 160, 22 NE 707; Reg. v. Gagan, 17 U. C. C. P. (Ont.) 530) (2) or as a distinct offense (Rex v. Nier, 9 Alta. L. 353, 25 CanCrCas 241, 28 DomLR 373, 33 WestLR 180, 9 WestWkly 838) (3) under statutes making it a misdemeanor to swear to any false certificate, affidavit, or other statement (State v. Lynes, 194 Mo. A. 184, 185 SW 535).

[b] Under a particular statute punishing statements which would be perjury if made in judicial proceedings but which are made elsewhere pursuant to oath, affirmation, or solemn declaration required or authorized by law, a false statutory declaration relative to proof of an insurance claim is punishable even if not required by a special insurance act where it is in a form authorized by the Canada Evidence Act. Rex v. Nier, 9 Alta. L. 353, 25 CanCrCas 241, 28 DomLR 373, 33 WestLR 180, 9 WestWkly 838.

55. [a] May not be predicated.—False and sworn statements made in a return under an oleomargarine act cannot constitute perjury where the oath was not authorized by law. U. S. v. Lamson, 165 Fed. 80 (under the Oleomargarine Act the governmental department authorized to require statements or returns relative to its investigations is not authorized to require sworn statements, and therefore a false sworn statement made pursuant to a departmental regulation is not perjury within the United States perjury statute because not under oath required or authorized by law).

56. [a] May be predicated.—(1) Reg. v. Chamberlain, 10 Man. 261. (2) A state statute making it unlawful to make a false affidavit concerning a petition for a state recall election applies to a petition for a municipal recall election under a charter expressly making all general state laws applicable to municipal elections. Peo. v. Carroll, 39 Cal. A. 654, 180 P 49. (3) Under a statute punishing a false and sworn statement for "any purpose," a false affidavit made in connection with proceedings of a political party relative to election of party officials is an indictable offense. State v. Breitweiser, 88 Mo. A. 648. (4) Under a statute making it an indictable offense to make under oath, affirmation, or solemn declaration required or authorized by law any statement which would amount to perjury if made in judicial proceedings, a false and solemn declaration voluntarily made before a justice of the peace relative to alleged improper acts of an election official is punishable. Reg. v. Skelton, 3 Terr. L. 58, 4 CanCrCas 467.

[b] May not be predicated.—U. S. v. Cameron, 282 Fed. 684.

[c] Statement not required under Corrupt Practices Act.—Since the adoption of the Seventeenth Amendment, providing for election of senators by popular vote, a candidate at such election is not a "candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention or for indorsement at any general or special election or election by the Legislature of any state," and is not required by the terms of Corrupt Practices Act § 8 (Comp. St. § 195), to file a statement of receipts and expenditures, and an indictment for perjury cannot be predicated on a false oath to any statement made by him under such provision. U. S. v. Cameron, 282 Fed. 684.

Liability of persons not "electors" see infra § 96.

57. [a] May be predicated.—Where a statement made upon oath by a person on his examination for discovery before trial in an action forms part of his evidence at the trial, it is evidence given in a judicial proceeding within the meaning of a statute punishing perjury. Rex v. Howley, 20 CanCrCas 36, 39 [aff 22 Can CrCas 108, 8 DomLR 1025, and quot Cyc]; Rex v. Thickens, 11 CanCrCas 274, 12 B. C. 223, 4 WestLR 454.

[b] Reason for rule.—"Every statement made upon oath by the person examined, during his examination for discovery, forms part of his evidence, within the meaning of section 145. I am unable to see that a witness under cross-examination may not give evidence as effectually as under examination-in-chief. Nor do I agree with the further contention of Mr. McPhillips, that as the Registrar, who holds the proceeding, i. e., the examination for discovery, makes no adjudication, he cannot be misled and therefore perjury cannot be committed. But, as the evidence given in the proceeding is taken down and may be used on the trial of the action, the court might be misled, and the circumstances would clearly be such as are intended to be covered by the definition. I think, however, that the definition of 'judicial proceeding' in subsection 3 of section 145 leaves no room for argument on this point. It seems to me only necessary to quote the first part of the sub-section: 'Every proceeding is judicial within the meaning of this section which is held in or under the authority of any court of justice.'" Rex v. T——, 12 B. C. 223, 224, 11 CanCrCas 274, 4 WestLR 454.

58. [a] May be predicated.—Under a statute making it a crime to give false testimony in a "civil cause," it is criminal to give false testimony in supplementary proceedings. U. S. v. Gutierrez, 12 Philippine 529.

59. [a] May be predicated.—State v. Budd, 65 Oh. St. 1, 60 NE 988.

[b] Although the statute permits the use of affidavits on the hearing of a motion to dissolve an injunction before a judge of the common pleas court sitting in chambers, the oral testimony of witnesses is competent on a hearing of that character; and one who knowingly and willfully testifies falsely in a material matter in giving such testimony is guilty of perjury. State v. Budd, 65 Oh. St. 1, 60 NE 988.

[§ 78] b. By Whom Administered—(1) Necessity of Power To Administer—(a) In General. It is an essential prerequisite to the establishment of the guilt of one accused of the crime of perjury or false swearing, as the case may be,[67] that the oath shall have been administered by a person authorized by law to administer it, and where the oath was administered by a person having no legal authority to do so, as by a person acting merely in a private capacity, or by one who had authority to administer certain oaths, but not the one in question, or by one who had authority seemingly colorable, but no authority in fact, there can be no conviction, for the oath is altogether idle.[67½]

Consent to administration of an oath by an unauthorized person will not render it a predicate for perjury.[68] Where, under local practice, written consent is required to authorize administration of the oath by a particular officer in a particular type of proceeding, perjury cannot be committed under an oath administered by such officer without such consent.[69]

[§ 79] (b) Ministerial Acts. The competency of the person who reads the words of the oath to the witness and does the ministerial part of its administration is immaterial.[70]

[§ 80] (c) Under Laws of United States. To constitute perjury or false swearing under the laws of the United States, it must appear that the officer administering the oath was authorized so to do by the laws of the United States.[71] Where the particular United States statute applicable to the matter or proceeding involved authorizes administration of the oath by an officer empowered to take oaths under state laws,[72] such state officer is authorized to administer oaths under the laws of the United States within the meaning of this rule, the authorization being found in the particular United States statute,[73] or statute and regulation,[74] applicable to the case.

[a] For instance, where a bailiff made a false statement of facts respecting an expense account, and such statement purported to be sworn to under his previous oath of office, it could not be perjury, as such oath related only to the promise to fulfill his duties and could not serve as an oath to extraneous statements of fact. Rex v. Tremblay, 26 Que. K. B. 37, 28 CanCrCas 21, 35 DomLR 209.

Notaries public can administer oaths[75] and take affidavits[76] on which perjury can be predicated in a federal court, only in cases and to the extent authorized by the federal statutes.

[§ 81] (2) Who Empowered To Administer[77]—(a) In General. Perjury or false swearing[78] cannot be assigned upon an oath administered by an officer who has failed to qualify[79] or who is incompetent to hold the office,[80] or whose power to administer the oath has expired by limitation of time;[81] or who is acting outside of his territorial jurisdiction,[82] unless his power to administer oaths is not territorially limited.[83]

Defendant swearing himself. In the absence of express statutory authority[84] one cannot be convicted of false swearing for a false statement made under an oath administered by himself to himself.[85]

[§ 82] (b) De Facto Officers.[86] That perjury or false swearing, as the case may be,[87] may be predicated upon a false statement made under an oath administered by a de facto officer has been both affirmed[88] and denied.[89] If the person administering the oath is not even an officer de facto,[90] he cannot administer an oath serving as the basis of a prosecution for perjury.[91]

[§ 83] (c) Deputies. Where an officer has authority to appoint deputies, if necessary for the discharge of the duties of his office, a false oath taken before such a deputy is as much perjury as if taken before the officer himself.[92]

[§ 84] (d) Particular Persons or Officers[93]—aa. Court or Court Officer. An oath administered by the clerk or other officer of a court, in open court and under the direction of the court, is an oath administered by the court so that false testimony under such oath may be perjury.[94]

ed. 113 ("false swearing" may be committed under an oath administered by a state magistrate pursuant to a United States treasury department regulation); State v. Woerndle, 109 Or. 461, 209 P 604, 220 P 744 (perjury in passport application serving as ground for disbarment of attorney).

[a] Regulation of the land department that declaratory statements in homestead proceedings "may be executed before any officer having a seal and authorized to administer oaths generally" is consistent with United States statutes requiring such statements to be in affidavit form and specifying certain officers authorized to administer oaths, and a charge of perjury in such declaratory statements may be based upon oaths administered by notaries public or clerks of state courts pursuant to such regulations. U. S. v. Morehead, 243 U. S. 607, 37 SCt 458, 61 L. ed. 926.

Oath authorized by implication see supra § 49 text and note 25.

75. See cases infra this note.

[a] Investigation by post office.—U. S. Rev. St. § 1778, authorizing notaries public to administer oaths in all cases in which justices of the peace have power to administer them, gives no power to administer an oath in investigation by the post-office department as to the alleged loss of a registered letter, for there is no statute giving justices such power, and hence no indictment for perjury can be based upon false statements in an affidavit made before a notary in such an investigation. U. S. v. Law, 50 Fed. 915.

[b] Proceedings before land office.—Notaries public are not authorized by any law of the United States to administer oaths to affidavits required by the rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner of the general land office; and perjury cannot therefore be assigned upon such an affidavit. U. S. v. Manion, 44 Fed. 800.

76. See cases infra this note.

[a] Act Congr. Aug. 15, 1876 c 304 provides that notaries public of the several states shall be authorized to take affidavits in the same manner and with the same effect as commissioners of the United States circuit court may lawfully take or do. U. S. v. Hardison, 135 Fed. 419.

[b] Prior to the passage of Act Congr. Febr. 26, 1881, authorizing notaries public to administer oaths in certain cases, notaries public had no authority under the laws of the United States to administer oaths in such cases. U. S. v. Curtis, 107 U. S. 671, 2 SCt 507, 27 L. ed. 534.

[a] Ministerial act by another.—Although an oath administered by one not a court officer cannot serve as the basis for a charge of perjury, where such a person performs merely the physical act of administering the oath in the presence and by direction of the court clerk, who personally signs the jurat, the oath will be regarded as having been in law

Administered by the clerk in the absence of the court an oath may be sufficient on which to predicate perjury.[95]

Court stenographer. Under statute authorizing a court stenographer to administer oaths in the discharge of his duties,[96] perjury may be predicated upon an oath so administered by him,[97] provided he has been sworn if required by statute.[98]

Judge. Perjury may be predicated upon an oath administered by a circuit judge.[99]

Prosecuting attorney. Perjury may be assigned upon an oath administered by a prosecuting attorney in the discharge of his duties.[1] Under statutes[2] abolishing the usual rule of strict construction applicable to penal statutes,[3] and providing that a county attorney shall have power to compel persons to appear before him to testify respecting alleged violations of gambling laws, power of such attorney to administer an oath will be implied, and violation of such oath may constitute perjury.[4] But a false statement pursuant to an oath administered by a county solicitor to a witness not brought before him by court process is made under an oath administered without authority, and is therefore not perjury.[5]

United States commissioner.[6] Under laws of the United States granting to United States commissioners power to administer oaths,[7] an oath administered by such an official may serve as the predicate for perjury,[8] unless he acted beyond his authority.[9]

[§ 85] bb. Justice of the Peace.[10] Where a justice of the peace is empowered to administer the oath,[11] false statements under oath administered by a justice may constitute perjury[12] or false swearing.[13] But oaths administered by justices of the peace beyond their jurisdiction cannot be made the basis of a charge of perjury.[14]

Capacity in which justice acts. It is not necessary that a justice should act in his judicial capacity in administering the oath, it being sufficient to authorize a charge of perjury if he administered the oath in his official capacity.[15]

[§ 86] cc. Notary Public.[16] A false statement pursuant to an oath administered by a notary public acting within his authority to administer oaths[17] may constitute perjury[18] or false swearing.[19] But perjury cannot be assigned upon a false oath taken before a notary lacking authority to administer it.[20] One whose application for a notary's commission has been approved, but who has not qualified[21] within the time prescribed by statute,[22] cannot administer an oath which will serve as the basis for a charge of false swearing,[23] not being regarded as even a de facto officer[24] within the rule permitting punishment for false statements made under oath administered by a de facto officer.[25]

[§ 87] dd. Other Officials. Among other persons or officers, in addition to those already mentioned,[26] who have been held to possess the power to admin-administered by the clerk so that a false statement under such oath is perjury. Walker v. State, 107 Ala. 5, 18 S 393. See also supra § 79.

[a] Notary administering oath in judicial proceeding.—Notaries being competent to administer oaths, not only in statutory proceedings, but also "in all cases," which necessarily includes all civil and criminal cases in which affidavits may be required by law, a false statement pursuant to an oath administered by a notary in an affidavit on motion for a new trial may constitute perjury. State v. Varnado, 154 La. 575, 97 S 865.

[b] In Washington, in prosecutions for perjury in the second degree (1) it has been held that a notary is authorized to take affidavits not required by law and that the voluntary maker of a false affidavit before a notary is subject to prosecution for perjury in the second degree. State v. Howard, 91 Wash. 481, 158 P 104. (2) Earlier authority is to the effect that a notary is without authority to administer an oath not required by law and that consequently an oath administered by a notary in a proceeding held by an investigating committee acting beyond its legal powers could not be second degree perjury. State v. Dallagiovanna, 69 Wash. 84, 124 P 209, 40 LRANS 249 (a further ground for this decision was that the proceeding was unauthorized and therefore not of the character in which a false statement can constitute perjury. Necessity that proceeding be authorized see supra § 55 text and notes 60, 61.

19. Anderson v. Com., (Ky.) 117 SW 364 (in a prosecution under the Banking Act providing that a false and sworn report of a bank's condition should constitute the crime of false swearing, it was held that the notary was authorized to administer the oath so that violation thereof constituted the crime of false swearing).

ister an oath or take an affidavit on which perjury or false swearing may be predicated are an alderman,[27] a draft board official,[28] an election official,[29] a foreman of a grand jury,[30] a school commissioner,[31] a special commissioner or master appointed in bankruptcy proceedings,[32] and a tax official.[33] But in the absence of statutory authorization[34] an arbitrator[35] or an acting crown timber agent,[36] lacks power to administer such an oath.

[§ 88] c. Form of Oath—(1) In General. No particular form of oath is necessary as the basis of a prosecution for perjury,[37] it being sufficient if defendant takes any form of oath or affirmation customary to persons of his race or belief,[38] and indicating that he is making a sworn statement as distinguished from a mere assertion.[39] It will be presumed that the mode which a witness adopted in taking the oath was the one which accorded with his belief, and which he considered binding on his conscience,[40] and where at the time he was sworn

27. Com. v. Frank, 7 Pa. Dist. 143, 21 Pa. Co. 120 (an alderman has the same power to administer oaths as a justice of the peace, and perjury may be predicated upon a false statement made under an oath administered by an alderman outside his own township).

28. Hardwick v. U. S., 257 Fed. 505, 168 CCA 509 (an oath administered by an associate member of the legal advisory board, serving as advisers to a military draft board, pursuant to regulations promulgated under the Selective Service Act, may serve as the basis of a prosecution for perjury).

(2) But where the tax official lacks such power under the governing statutes, an oath administered by him in the course of his duties cannot serve as a basis of a prosecution for perjury. State v. [c] Township assessor.—State v. Phippen, 62 Iowa 54, 17 NW 146.

[d] Neither express nor implied authority.—Where a tax statute provided that the assessor should "require" a return of real and personal property to be sworn to by the taxpayer, but was silent as to who should administer the oath, and a general statute specified various officers authorized to administer oaths but omitted the tax assessor, the latter lacked authority to administer an oath on a tax return which could serve as the basis of a charge of perjury. "If the defendant was sworn, the oath need not be in any particular form." Holy v. U. S., 278 Fed. 521.

[a] Reasons for rule.—(1) "The purpose of an oath is to secure the truth, and hence any form thereof which is ordinarily calculated to appeal to the conscience of the person to whom it is administered, and by which he signifies that his conscience is bound, is sufficient." State v. Hulsman, 147 Iowa 572, 573, 126 NW 700. [c] Oath may be administered on the Book, or with uplifted hand, or in any mode peculiar to the religious belief of the person swearing, or in any form binding on his conscience. U. S. v. Mallard, 40 Fed. 151, 5 LRA 816.

39. U. S. v. Mallard, supra.

[a] "The underlying principle . . . is that whenever the attention of the person who comes up to swear is called to the fact that the statement is not a mere asseveration, but must be sworn to, and, in recognition of this, he is asked to do some corporal act, and does it, this is a statement under oath. And this, without kissing any book, or raising his hand, or doing any religious act." U. S. v. Mallard, 40 Fed. 151, 5 LRA 816.

40. Peo. v. Parent, 139 Cal. 600, 73

he made no objection to the form of its administration, but took it and testified under it, he will not be allowed, in order to escape the penalty for perjury, to claim that it was not administered in strict conformity with law.[41] But where the witness states before he is sworn the form of oath that he considers binding on his conscience, and is sworn by a different form of oath, perjury cannot be assigned on the latter.[42]

Where a foreign language contains no equivalent for the English word "conscience," it is sufficient that the witness be sworn to speak the truth according to his moral sense.[43]

Even where statute prescribes form of oath,[44] a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient;[45] but perjury cannot be predicated upon an oath[46] or on a solemn declaration[47] which is not even in substantial compliance with statutory requirements.

[§ 89] (2) Irregularities.[48] It is no defense that the oath was taken or administered in an irregular manner,[49] especially not under statutes[50] expressly providing that irregularities in the administration of an oath shall be no defense to a prosecution for perjury;[51] but such statutes cannot put the breath of legal life into a nonexistent oath.[52]

Particular formalities. It is ordinarily no defense to a prosecution for perjury that the witness failed to raise his hand,[53] or to swear with one hand on the Bible,[54] or to kiss the Book,[55] or to stand with the rest of the witnesses;[56] nor that the customary phrase, "So help you God," was omitted;[57] nor that the administering officer used inexact language respecting the matter as to which the witness was to testify.[58]

[a] General, instead of restricted, oath.—Where a party willfully testifies untruly as to matters material to the issue, it is perjury, although he was sworn generally, but without objection, to tell the whole truth, instead of being sworn to make true answers to such questions as should be asked. State v. Keene, 26 Me. 33.

46. Peo. v. Cohen, 118 Cal. 74, 50 P 20; Aldridge v. State, (Ga. A.) 147 SE 414. See Ashburn v. State, 15 Ga. 246 (holding that a defendant accused of gambling could not be indicted upon testimony of witnesses who were not sworn in substantial compliance with the form prescribed by statute, since perjury could not be predicated upon such oaths).

[a] For example, Pen. Code § 121, providing that "it is no defense to a prosecution for perjury that the oath was administered or taken in an irregular manner," does not excuse the necessity of an oath in substantial form administered by a person of competent authority. Peo. v. Cohen, 118 Cal. 74, 75, 50 P 20.

[b] Defective oath before grand jury.—Where, by statute, it was provided that the following oath should be administered to one testifying before the grand jury: "The evidence you shall give the grand jury on this bill of indictment (or presentment, as the case may be—here state the case) shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So help you God," and the foreman administered an oath repeating the statutory words with the exception of those referring to the grand jury and bill of indictment, the oath was not even in substantial compliance with the statute because it omitted reference to the case, and therefore could not serve as the predicate for perjury. Aldridge v. State, (Ga. A.) 147 SE 414, 415.

(1905) § 2681, providing that the mode of administering an oath commonly practiced in the place where taken shall be followed, including the uplifting of the hand, is a mere irregularity, which, under § 4832, declaring that it shall not be a defense to a charge of perjury that the oath has been administered in an irregular manner, is no defense to such a charge. 52. Peo. v. Swasey, 122 Misc. 388, 203 NYS 22.

[a] For instance, a statute, providing that "it is no defense to a prosecution for perjury that an oath was administered or taken in an irregular manner,' applies only to cases where some oath was administered, but administered in a manner defective in form. It does not create the obligation of an oath where it has not been consciously assumed in some form; it cannot cure that which never had life enough to be sick." Peo. v. [a] Scotch oath.—Where, without objection, a witness was sworn by "the adjuratory invocation of the Deity with uplifted hand commonly called the Scotch oath," instead of using the more modern form by kissing the Book, which latter form was customary in the jurisdiction, he could nevertheless be convicted of perjury because the form used was sufficient to bind his conscience. Curry v. Rex, 48 Can. S. C. 532, 22 Can CrCas 191, 15 DomLR 347, 13 EastLR 550 [dism app 47 N. S. 176, 21 CanCr Cas 273, 12 DomLR 13, 13 EastLR 11].

[§ 90] (3) Oath on Information and Belief.[59] One who swears to a matter as to the best of his knowledge, information, and belief is guilty of perjury where he did not believe that the matter sworn to was true.[60]

[§ 91] d. Verification of Written Statements[61]—(1) In General. Under statutes requiring certain testimony to be in writing,[62] it has been both affirmed[63] and denied[64] that oral testimony of the statutory character can constitute perjury. Under a statute requiring specified examinations to be made under oath, but permissive as to whether or not the statements shall be reduced to writing,[65] a statement on such examination made under oath but not reduced to writing may constitute false swearing.[66]

[§ 92] (2) Attachment to Other Papers. It is not necessary that a false affidavit of verification shall itself state the facts sworn to, but they may be stated in the report or pleading to which the affidavit is attached.[67] But whether or not an affidavit complete in itself as respects statement of facts, and filed in a judicial proceeding, is attached to other documents, in connection with which it is to be used, is immaterial.[68]

[§ 93] (3) Signing and Swearing.[69] Signing without swearing. Merely signing and delivering a paper in affidavit form without actually swearing to the truth thereof ordinarily cannot serve as the basis for a charge of perjury,[70] even though the jurat was later signed by the officer.[71] But if affiant is told that by signing the statement he thereby swears to it, his signature may be a sufficient oath.[72]

Swearing without signing. Swearing to an affidavit without signing is ordinarily sufficient to support a charge of perjury.[73] If signed, however, the oath must be taken by the person who signs it.[74]

[§ 94] (4) Reading Instrument.[75] A false affidavit may constitute perjury, even though read neither to nor by affiant, provided he knew the contents thereof when swearing to it.[76]

A statute making it contempt of court to swear falsely in open court does not prevent the same false swearing from being punishable as perjury.[79]

[§ 96] B. Capacity To Commit the Crime.[80] The general capacity of particular parties to commit perjury[81] or crime generally[82] is treated elsewhere.

Under election statutes.[83] Under a statute authorizing election officers to administer the oath, respecting his qualifications, "to any elector offering to vote,"[84] it has been held that one not qualified as an elector cannot commit perjury in swearing falsely as to his qualifications because he is not an "elector" to whom alone the oath may be administered;[85] and that a third person cannot commit perjury under such statute because he is not "the elector offering to vote."[86] But a similar statute has been construed as permitting administration of the oath to anyone offering himself as an elector.[87]

[§ 97] C. Former Acquittal or Conviction—1. For Same Offense. While under the general former jeopardy rule[88] an acquittal or conviction for perjury bars a subsequent prosecution therefor,[89] the offenses must be identical to permit the defense of former jeopardy;[90] and hence a prior prosecution for perjury will not bar a subsequent prosecution for a different and distinct perjury.[91]

[§ 98] 2. In Proceeding in Which Perjury Committed. The general rule is that acquittal in the cause in which false testimony was given does not bar subsequent prosecution for perjury[92] or false swearing,[93] such prior acquittal being regarded as establishing neither the defense of former jeopardy,[94] nor that of res judicata.[95] To hold other-

He was not an elector, nor entitled to vote in the constituency, and at the trial his counsel contended that there was no authority for the deputy returning officer, under the Dominion Elections Act [Can. Rev. St. c 8 § 45], to administer an oath to any person but an elector, and the judge reserved the case for the opinion of the court as to whether the prisoner had been properly convicted. It was held that the statute must receive a reasonable construction, that authority was intended to be conferred upon the officer to administer the oath to any person presenting himself and claiming to be an elector entitled to vote, and that, under Cr. Code [1892] § 148, the prisoner had been properly convicted of perjury).

[a] The issues are different.—In the first case the issue is the guilt or innocence of the particular crime charged, and in the second the truthfulness of the testimony. State v. Archuleta, 29 N. M. 25, 217 P 619.

[b] Public policy.—"The doctrine of res judicata springs out of and is founded upon the principle of estoppel. It rests upon the principle of public policy that there should be an end to litigation—the maxim is, 'Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium.' Keeping in view the basic principle and underlying reason—public policy—it is obvious that while public policy on the one hand demands an end of litigation, and hence puts forward the doctrine of res judicata, yet, on the other, it is manifest that every interest of public policy demands that perjury be not shielded by artificial refinements and narrow technicalities, for perjury strikes at the very administration of the law and holds the courts up to contempt if they allow the perjurer to go unwhipt of justice. In other words, while public policy on the one hand creates the doctrine of res judicata, it also, on the other, requires that per-wise would be to put a premium on perjury,[96] and to make immunity from punishment for perjury rest upon success in commission of the crime.[97] Some authorities hold the rule applicable, even though conviction of perjury necessarily involves a flat contradiction of the prior verdict of acquittal.[98] Other authorities, while admitting that double jeopardy is not involved,[99] hold that prior acquittal bars a subsequent conviction of perjury based upon a direct contradiction of the prior verdict.[1] Irrespective of this conflict the authorities agree that a prior acquittal is no bar to a subsequent prosecution for perjury upon a matter collateral[2] or subordinate[3] to the main issue of guilt or innocence, or where the charge of perjury is not necessarily based upon the assumption that defendant is guilty of the crime of which he was acquitted.[4]

A third person giving false testimony as a witness in the trial of another cannot plead the other's acquittal as a bar to his own prosecution for false swearing at such trial.[5]

V. PERSONS LIABLE[6]

[By Douglas Robinson Gray]

[§ 99] A. In General. Generally speaking[7] every person joining in a false statement, the other elements of the offense being present,[8] and such person being legally capable of committing the crime,[9] may be prosecuted for perjury or false swearing[10] therein.[11] jurers be brought to trial. It would be a monstrous doctrine to hold that a person could go into a court of justice and by perjured testimony secure an acquittal, and because acquitted he could not be tried for his perjury; this would be putting a premium upon perjury and allowing a scoundrel to take advantage of his own wrong. Public policy does not guaranty immunity to criminals, and that is just what we are asked to do in extending the doctrine of res judicata to perjury. It is a maxim of the law that when the reason ceases the law ceases." Jay v. State, 15 Ala. A. 255, 73 S 137, 139 [certiorari den 198 Ala. 691, 73 S 1000].

[a] For instance, where acquittal of a seduction charge necessarily involved a finding as to the truth of defendant's denial of sexual intercourse with complainant, defendant could nevertheless be prosecuted for perjury based upon the assumption that such denial was false. Jay v. State, 15 Ala. A. 255, 73 S 137 [certiorari den 198 Ala. 691, 73 S 1000].

[b] Necessary contradiction.—Acquittal is no bar to a prosecution for perjury for false testimony given by accused, although a convicton of perjury would necessarily contradict the verdict of not guilty. Peo. v. Niles, 300 Ill. 458, 133 NE 252, 37 ALR 1284. Compare infra text and note 1.

Passing or trying to pass in February counterfeit coins upon various residents of Winston-Salem is not the same offense as forswearing one's self in June in the United States District Court at Greensboro." Allen v. U. S., supra.

[a] Autrefois acquit.—If defendant applied for a ballot at the polls under a false name, he committed the crime of false personation, and acquittal of a charge of false personation would not establish the plea of autrefois acquit so as to bar upon this particular ground a subsequent prosecution for perjury based upon defendant's later act of taking oath at the polls that he was the person he had represented himself to be, as the two offenses of false personation and perjury were distinct and separate. Smith, 119 Minn. 107, 108, 137 NW 295 (where the court held a former acquittal no bar under the facts and said: "An acquittal upon a prosecution for a crime is not a bar to a subsequent prosecution for perjury predicated upon testimony given upon such former prosecution, unless a conviction of the charge of perjury would necessarily import a contradicton of the jury's verdict upon the former trial"); Murff v. State, 76 Tex. Cr. 5, 172 SW 238 (holding that there must be evidence additional to that offered in the previous prosecution).

[a] For example, a person cannot be convicted of perjury in swearing to a state of facts which a jury in another case against him has found to be true. U. S. v. Butler, 38 Fed. 498.

[b] Mere denial of guilt.—Where the testimony alleged to be false is as broad and general as the charge of the crime, in other words, a mere denial of guilt, an acquittal bars a subsequent prosecution for perjury because the perjury trial is in effect a second trial of the same matter. Chitwood v. U. S., 178 Fed. 442, 101 CCA 342.

[c] Res judicata.—Where defendant was accused of applying for a ballot as a person other than himself, and acquitted of the crime of false personation, and later prosecuted for the distinct crime of perjury in having sworn falsely that he was such person, his acquittal, while not establishing the defense of autrefois acquit, did establish that of res judicata because it necessarily involved a finding that defendant was the person he represented himself to be, and therefore such acquittal barred a subsequent prosecution for perjury. Rex v. Quinn, 11 Ont. L. 242, 6 OntWR 1011.

[d] Same subject and evidence.—A defendant acquitted in the trial in which alleged false testimony was given cannot be convicted of perjury on the same subject and evidence that resulted in his acquittal. Allen v. U. S., 194 Fed. 664, 114 CCA 357, 39 LRANS 385.

[a] Armed or unarmed burglar.—An acquittal of burglary will not preclude a conviction of perjury where accused falsely testified that at the time of his arrest he was unarmed, the question as to whether or not defendant was armed being collateral to his innocence or guilt of burglary. McDaniel v. State, 13 Ala. A. 318, 69 S 351 [certiorari den 193 Ala. 678, 69 S 1018].

[a] Evidentiary matter.—A defendant, who testified in his own defense, may be prosecuted for false testimony as to a subordinate evidential matter, not a mere denial of the entire charge, notwithstanding an acquittal in the case in which the testimony was given. Youngblood v. U. S., 266 Fed. 795.

4. Yarbrough v. State, 79 Fla. 256, 83 S 873; State v. Smith, 119 Minn. 107, 137 NW 295.

[a] Possession of stolen automobile.—An acquittal on an indictment charging larceny of an automobile is not a bar to a subsequent conviction for perjury committed by defendant as a witness in his own behalf on the former trial by swearing falsely that he had not seen and did not have such automobile in his possession, since the charge of perjury is not necessarily based upon assumption of guilt of larceny, and acquittal of larceny does not necessarily mean all material testimony in defendant's favor was true. Yarbrough v. State, 79 Fla. 256, 83 S 873.

5. Partin v. Com., 154 Ky. 701, 159 SW 542.

[a] For example, that a person accused of violating the Local Option Law is acquitted on the perjured testimony of a witness is not a bar to a subsequent prosecution of such witness for false swearing. Partin v. Com., 154 Ky. 701, 159 SW 542.

11. Reg. v. Skelton, 3 Terr. L. 58, 4 CanCrCas 467.

[a] An affidavit signed by more than one person stating that "we" declare something to be true is not ambiguous as to who makes which statement therein, but is to be construed as the statement of each signer, rendering each liable to punishment. Reg. v. Skelton, 3 Terr. L. 58, 4 CanCrCas 467.

[§ 100] B. Privileged Witnesses[12]—1. In General. A privileged witness,[13] such as a defendant in a criminal trial[14] or a person whose testimony may tend to incriminate him,[15] may be prosecuted for perjury or false swearing[16] if he waives his privilege and testifies falsely. A fortiori, where there is no privilege, the witness cannot escape liability for false testimony.[17] But, if he has the privilege and does not waive it but testifies because illegally compelled to do so, he is not liable for perjury so committed.[18]

What constitutes waiver. It has been both affirmed[19] and denied[20] that a witness who testifies without objecting on a subject which may tend to incriminate him thereby waives his privilege and may be held for perjury if he testifies falsely.

[§ 101] 2. Under Immunity Statutes. Under Immunity statutes protecting a witness from prosecution for offenses as to which he is compelled to incriminate himself,[21] a witness compelled to testify on a self-incriminatory matter may be held for perjury if he swears falsely.[22]

[a] Defendant voluntarily testifying in his own trial for a crime is guilty of perjury if he swears falsely. Robinson v. State, 146 Miss. 753, 112 S 167.

[b] In the Philippines (1) it has been said that perjury committed by a party in his own cause would not be punishable under Spanish legislation because under such legislation no one was a witness in his own cause and therefore could not become guilty of giving false testimony therein. U. S. v. Soliman, 36 Philippine 5; U. S. v. Gutierrez, 12 Philippine 529. (2) But under statutes authorizing a party to testify in his own behalf, one so doing may be held for perjury committed in either a civil (U. S. v. Gutierrez, supra; U. S. v. Brondial, 11 Philippine 363) (3) or a criminal (U. S. v. Soliman, supra) proceeding. (4) Neither the possibility that liability for perjury may expose defendants acquitted of one charge to vexatious prosecution for perjury by disappointed prosecuting officials, nor that fear of subsequent prosecution for perjury may embarrass accused persons testifying in their own behalf is sufficient to change the rule of liability for perjury committed by a defendant in a criminal proceeding. U. S. v. Soliman, supra.

18. U. S. v. Bell, 81 Fed. 830; Claborn v. State, 115 Ark. 387, 171 SW 862. See Pipes v. State, 26 Tex. A. 318, 321, 9 SW 614 (where, in a case in which the text rule was held inapplicable on the facts, the court said: "Let us suppose that a witness is forced to testify before a grand jury or court to facts tending to criminate himself, and perjury is attempted to be assigned upon statements made by him under such state of case, could the prosecution be legally sustained? We think not. This state of case, however, does not appear"). But see State v. Lehman, 175 Mo. 619, 75 SW 139; State v. Faulkner, 175 Mo. 546, 75 SW 116 (in both of which the decision turned on the point that defendant had failed to claim his privilege and thereby waived it, but wherein there is dicta to the effect that if defendant had claimed his privilege and still been compelled to testify, he could nevertheless have been convicted of perjury, as he should have kept still and gone to jail for contempt and then tried to get out on habeas corpus).

[a] Reason for rule.—"A procedure compelling one to accuse or convict himself of crime is contrary to the genius of modern criminal jurisprudence and harks back somewhat to the spirit and methods of the Spanish inquisition. Our Constitution, statutes and decisions show clearly that it is the policy of our laws to protect all persons from criminal proceedings of any character based upon evidence obtained from the persons themselves, unless such evidence has been freely and voluntarily given." Claborn v. State, 115 Ark. 387, 391, 171 SW 862 ("an indictment for perjury based upon alleged false swearing in a criminal proceeding pending before the grand jury against the person himself giving the alleged false testimony, is fatally defective unless it alleges that the accused voluntarily appeared before the grand jury to give the testimony upon which the indictment for perjury is predicated").

[b] Ignorance of rights.—Where a negro without knowledge of his privilege of refusal to incriminate himself was privately examined in connection with a pension claim, without being advised by the examiner of such privilege, and swore falsely, he could not be prosecuted for perjury because under these circumstances no waiver of the privilege was shown, and in the absence of waiver testimony of a privileged witness cannot constitute perjury. Truthtelling may be the highest virtue, but constitutional privileges cannot be violated to enforce it. U. S. v. Bell, 81 Fed. 830.

[c] In Kentucky, under a statute making it false swearing for an affiant to testify falsely on a subject upon which he can legally be sworn or on which he is required to be sworn, it has been held that a defendant may be convicted of false swearing where he was required against his objection to testify as to a matter which might tend to incriminate him, on the theory that the statute punished false swearing, not only on subjects upon which the affiant could legally be sworn, but also on subjects upon which he was required to be sworn, even though such requirement was illegal. [a] Provision of the Bankruptcy Act (1) to the effect that no testimony given by a bankrupt shall be offered in evidence against him in any criminal proceeding has been construed as not granting immunity from punishment for perjury in such proceedings (Cameron v. U. S., 231 U. S. 710, 34 SCt 244, 58 L. ed. 448; Glickstein v. U. S., 222 U. S. 139, 32 SCt 71, 56 L. ed. 128; Cameron v. U. S., 192 Fed. 548, 113 CCA 20 [certiorari granted 223 U. essary that the action or proceeding in which the perjury was committed shall have terminated before the prosecution for perjury is commenced,[25] as by the filing of an information or finding an indictment;[26] and the court trying the perjury charge may, in its sound discretion, proceed to trial and final verdict, notwithstanding the other action or proceeding is still pending.[27] Nevertheless in practice the prosecution for perjury is frequently continued until the proceeding in which the perjury is alleged to have been committed has been ended,[28] and finding indictments against parties or witnesses for alleged perjury in a civil action while proceedings are still pending in such action has been disapproved.[29] It has been held that a person may be tried for an alleged perjury in a coroner's inquest where such inquest has terminated and the prosecution for perjury is wholly distinct from the proceeding at the inquest, although an indictment against accused for a different offense, based on the same general transaction, is pending.[30]

[a] Reasons for practice.—(1) In the English courts the policy of the law forbids that a witness in a civil action pending should be made infamous through a conviction for perjury, obtained upon the testimony of a party to the suit while pending. Eighmy v. Peo., 79 N. Y. 546. (2) It "enables the Commonwealth to procure the best evidence of the alleged perjured testimony by producing the completed record of the trial in which it occurred, and also furnishes the means of determining whether or not the alleged false testimony was material to the issue involved, an essential element of the crime of perjury." Com. v. Hilton, 265 Pa. 353, 355, 108 A 828.

aminations before justices of the peace,[37] or in other proceedings,[38] hearings,[39] or examinations,[40] or in respect of other matters;[41] and an indictment for the statutory offense of false swearing which fails to bring the offense charged within the provisions of the statute is insufficient.[42] Prior to the modification of the strict common-law rules great particularity was required;[43] and this rule applied to averments in respect of matters of inducement.[44] Under the modern rules of procedure an indictment or information is sufficient in general if it avers the essential elements of the offense,[45] as set forth in the statute describing or defining the offense,[46] as for example the statutory offense of false swearing,[47] in such a manner as to inform accused of the charge or proof which he must meet,[48] and as to permit an acquittal thereunder to be pleaded in bar of a further prosecution for the same offense,[49] although inartificially or informally drawn.[50] It is usually required that the indictment or information should contain averments showing that the false oath was authorized or required by law;[51] describing or identifying the proceeding or matter in which, or in respect of which, the alleged false testimony or assertion was given;[52] showing the jurisdiction of the court or officer in respect of such proceeding or matter;[53] showing the authority of the administering officer to administer the oath;[54] describing or identifying the court or tribunal in which the alleged offense occurred;[55] describing or identifying the officer who administered the oath;[56] showing the due administration of the oath;[57] showing the subject matter of the alleged false testimony or assertion;[57½] showing the materiality of such testimony or assertion,[58] and also assigning perjury thereon.[59]

Matters of evidence. It is sufficient to allege the substantial and specific facts constituting the offense, without setting forth the evidence by which the truth of the averments is to be maintained.[60]

Averments showing either perjury or false swearing. The fact that the accusatory part of the indictment designates the offense as "false swearing" and that the descriptive part alleges a common-law perjury does not necessarily render the indictment insufficient.[62]

Concluding averment. At common law the indictment closed with a formal allegation to the effect that "the accused did commit willful and corrupt perjury."[63] But this concluding averment is ordinarily not required under the modern rules of procedure.[64] Where an indictment sufficiently charges a common-law perjury, the use of the words "contra formam statuti" does not necessarily invalidate it;[65] and where there is but one statute defining and punishing the crime of perjury, an indictment which concludes "against the form of the statute" is good.[66]

Surplusage. Matter in the indictment or information which could have been omitted without injury to the sense or detriment to the essential averments may be disregarded as surplusage.[67]

[§ 104] b. Under Specific Statutes. In England in order to remedy difficulties in procuring a conviction for perjury because of the technical and complicated form of allegations required by the common-law procedure,[68] a statute was enacted which regulated the method of making the necessary allegations in an indictment for perjury.[69] In some jurisdictions in this country this statute was not recognized as a part of the common law,[70] and some earlier decisions were to the effect that the indictment must comply with common-law requirements,[71] although there is authority apparently to the contrary.[72] In many jurisdictions in this country statutes, similar to the English statute, have been enacted which provide what allegations or averments are necessary or sufficient.[73] In general an indictment or information is sufficient, which in its allegations or averments complies with the statutes applicable to indictments for perjury, and which sets forth all the elements of the offense with sufficient particularity to show on its face that a crime has been committed and to enable accused to know with reasonable certainty what is the charge or matter of fact which he must meet.[74] But a statute cannot make valid and sufficient an indictment in which the accusation does not meet these requirements.[75] Under such statutes matters of inducement may be charged in general terms,[76] but the allegations which charge the offense itself should be direct and specific.[77]

[§ 105] 2. Time of Making Statement. In the absence of a statute affecting the rule the day on which the offense was committed must be truly laid,[78] and an indictment is bad where it is wholly uncertain as to which of two dates was the date on which the offense was committed;[79] but allegations may be sufficient where the day may be gathered from a consideration of the indictment as a whole,[80] as where the particular day is set forth in the concluding part of the indictment.[81] Under statutes modifying the strict common-law rules as to averments of time,[82] an indictment or information is not necessarily insufficient because the averments do not fix the time precisely,[83] or because the averments as to time are imperfect,[84] or are omitted.[85]

Surplusage. Where a date mentioned has apparently no connection with the other language of the indictment or is a clerical error, it may be rejected as surplusage.[86]

[§ 106] 3. Place of Making Statement. General rules in respect of averments as to the venue or place of a crime[87] apply to an indictment or information for perjury or false swearing.[88] The omission of the venue from the affidavit on which an indictment is based does not affect the sufficiency of the indictment where the indictment itself contains a sufficient averment as to the place where the affidavit was made.[89]

[§ 107] 4. Oath Authorized or Required.[90] The indictment or information should show in some manner that the oath in respect of which the offense is charged was authorized or required in the particular matter or proceeding in the case both of perjury[91] and false swearing.[92] Thus an indictment or information based on an affidavit, verified instrument, or extrajudicial verified statement should show that the oath was authorized or required by law.[93] The allegation of facts from which the ultimate fact definitely appears is sufficient to show that the oath was required or authorized.[94] Where, under a statute, perjury may be committed in testifying or affirming in any cause, matter, or proceeding before any court, tribunal, body corporate, or other officer having authority to administer oaths, the indictment need not refer to the statute pursuant to which the oath was administered.[95]

[§ 108] 5. Compulsory or Voluntary Character of Testimony. While the fact that accused gave the false testimony must be averred in some form,[96] and, under certain conditions, the circumstances under which accused gave the testimony before the grand jury,[97] or on the trial of a case in which he was defendant,[98] should be shown, it has been held that the indictment or information need not show whether accused appeared as a witness voluntarily or under compulsion,[99] or affirmatively that he was

But see McCoy v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 606, 68 SW 686 (where an indictment was defective in stating the date as "on or about" a certain date).

[a] Illustrations.—(1) An allegation that the crime was committed "on or about" a specified date is sufficient as to the time, it not being necessary to allege the precise date, except when the date is a material ingredient of the crime. State v. Perry, 117 Iowa 463, 91 NW 765. (2) "At the April term of the Hendricks Circuit Court, in the year 1867," has been held sufficient since the terms of the circuit court are fixed by statute, and it is only necessary to show that the crime was committed within the statute of limitations. State v. Thrift, 30 Ind. 211.

[b] False swearing.—It seems that in an indictment for statutory false swearing the time need not be alleged otherwise than that the offense occurred before the finding of the indictment. Richey v. Com., 81 Ky. 524; Goslin v. Com., 90 SW 223, 28 KyL 683.

[b] Voluntary character of oath negatived.—Indictment for perjury in making an affidavit, which alleged that it was made to assist defendants in obtaining a new trial and to furnish a basis for motion therefor, sufficiently negatived the idea that it was a mere voluntary affidavit. warned that he could not be compelled to testify against himself.[1] In some jurisdictions, while an indictment based on testimony given by accused before the grand jury on the investigation of a specific charge against him,[2] or on testimony given by him on the trial of a charge against him[3] must aver or show that he voluntarily gave such testimony, such averment is not necessary where the indictment shows that the investigation before the grand jury did not involve a specific charge against accused and he could have been compelled to testify under an immunity statute protecting him from prosecution in respect of such testimony.[4]

[§ 109] 6. Occasion of Giving Testimony or of Administering Oath in General. An indictment or information for perjury should set forth specifically the occasion of the administration of the oath.[5] But a failure specifically to aver that the grand jury was in session when the oath was administered and the testimony given does not render the indictment insufficient where that fact may be inferred from the averments made.[6]

[§ 110] 7. Description, Subject Matter, Status, and Result of Proceeding in Which Testimony Given[7]—a. In General. The indictment or information should describe or identify the proceeding in which the perjury was committed.[8] A general description has been regarded as sufficient.[9] An averment that the testimony was given at the "trial of an action" has been regarded as sufficient to include a "preliminary trial" before a magistrate.[10] A mere technical defect in the description does not render the indictment insufficient.[11]

Name or style of case. Under modern statutes and rules of procedure, an averment of the name or style of the case has been regarded as sufficient,[12] and, according to some cases, is necessary.[13]

Surplusage. Allegations which are mere surplusage may be disregarded,[14] and such allegations need not be stricken where they do not prejudice accused.[15]

Status of proceeding. An indictment involving a judicial proceeding must show as a rule that the judicial proceeding was pending in court at the time the oath was taken and the false statement made,[16] but a specific allegation that the proceeding was pending is not necessary where the pendency appears from averments made.[17] An indictment based on evidence given on a voir dire examination need not contain an averment that there was a challenge.[18]

Case at issue or on trial. Failure specifically to aver that the case in which the false testimony was given was at issue,[19] or on trial,[20] is not a fatal defect where these facts are necessarily inferable from the averments made. Moreover, where it is alleged that issue was joined in a criminal case, it is not necessary to aver that accused had entered a plea of not guilty.[21] It is not necessary specifically to aver that the trial was held in or before the court where that fact appears from the averments made.[22]

[§ 111] b. Nature of Proceeding. It should appear in the indictment or information that the oath was taken, and the false swearing committed, in a judicial proceeding,[23] or in the course of justice,[24] or on some other occasion in which an oath was authorized or required.[25] However, it is not necessary specifically to aver that the perjury was committed in,[26] or in the course of, a judicial proceeding[27] where that fact appears from the facts alleged.

[§ 112] c. Subject Matter and Issues.[28] The statutory provision that it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the controversy or matter in respect of which the perjury was committed[29] has been construed to require a statement of the subject matter of the controversy or inquiry,[30] but in other jurisdictions in which this statutory provision is in force, such particularity is not required.[31] According to some cases, the criminal charge or offense involved in a trial or hearing in which the perjury was committed should be set forth with some degree of certainty,[32] but under modern statutes and rules of procedure a designation or description of such offense or charge which informs accused of the matter in respect of which the alleged perjury was committed is sufficient,[33] and a detailed description is not necessary.[34] Where the punishment for perjury committed on a trial for a felony is especially provided for by statute,[35] the indictment must show that the offense involved was a felony.[36]

Ground on which proceeding was based need not be alleged according to some cases.[37]

Issues. While the view has been taken that the substance of the issue in the proceeding in which the perjury was committed must be set out,[38] it has been held that failure to show what the specific issue was does not of itself render the indictment insufficient.[39]

Proceedings before grand jury.[40] The indictment or information should set forth the subject matter of the investigation by the grand jury, in which the false testimony was given, in the case both of perjury[41] and of statutory false swearing.[42] According to some cases the indictment should set forth the specific matter under investigation,[43] but there is authority for the view that it is not necessary to state the specific offense.[44] It is not necessary to aver the facts constituting the offense,[45] and a description in terms ordinarily used to describe a criminal offense is sufficient.[46] It is not necessary to state the name of a specified defendant,[47] or to allege that some person was guilty of an offense in regard to which the testimony was given[48] or that the person charged was or was not guilty.[49] Where the subject matter of the investigation is otherwise fully identified, an error in respect of certain descriptive matter is not fatal.[50]

[§ 113] d. Setting Out Record. At common law, where the alleged false oath was taken in court, it was necessary to set forth in the indictment with great particularity the pleadings, records, and proceedings on the trial, and the whole evidence.[51] To remedy the embarrassment to prosecutions by reason of this requirement as to particularity,[52] a statute was passed which dispensed with the necessity of setting out in the indictment the pleadings or any part of the record or proceedings.[53] Similar statutes have been enacted in many jurisdictions in this country.[54] Some of the statutes declare that it is sufficient to set forth the substance of the proceedings,[55] or the substance of the controversy or matter in respect of which the offense was committed.[56]

[§ 114] e. Result of Proceeding.[57] An indictment for perjury need not aver that the action or proceeding in which the false oath or statement was made has been finally determined,[58] or that any final judgment has been entered therein.[59]

[§ 115] 8. Form, Sufficiency, Purpose, and Use of Instrument in Which False Statement Made. An indictment or information based on an affidavit or extrajudicial verified statement, in addition to showing that the oath was authorized or required by law,[60] should show that such affidavit or statement was made under the circumstances prescribed by, or that it is within, the applicable statute;[61] but the charge is sufficient in this regard where the facts alleged show that the affidavit or oath was so made.[62] Where the writing is set out in the indictment, the fact that a word used to characterize the instrument is one which might equally be applicable to other instruments does not render the indictment bad where accused cannot be misled by such characterization.[63]

Pending proceedings. Where an affidavit apparently was to be used in a judicial proceeding, an indictment based on such affidavit should show that such proceeding was pending or that the affidavit was the commencement of such proceeding.[64] But where the affidavit may be made before the commencement of the action, it is not necessary to allege that any proceeding was pending when the affidavit was made.[65]

Purpose for which affidavit was made should be alleged where this is necessary to show that the extrajudicial affidavit or oath on which the charge is based was authorized or required by law,[66] but in the case of a voluntary affidavit, which under the statute may be the basis of a charge of perjury if made for any purpose, an allegation as to a specific purpose is not required.[67]

[a] Perjury in affidavit to hold to bail.—An affidavit to hold to bail may be sworn before the issuing of the

Use, filing, and effect. Where the use or filing of the affidavit[68] or the acceptance thereof, or action thereon, by another[69] is not an element of the offense,[70] it is not necessary to allege such use, filing, or acceptance. It has been held, however, that it should be shown either that the affidavit was intended by accused for use in the proceeding with which it is sought to connect it,[71] or that it was subsequently so used by him[72] or by some one with his consent.[73]

Knowledge on part of accused. According to some cases, there should be averments showing that accused had knowledge of the proceeding in which the affidavit was made,[74] and that the affidavit was to be used in such proceeding.[75]

Writing. The view has been taken that it is not necessary specifically to allege that the affidavit or statement in question was in writing where that fact is a necessary implication from the facts alleged.[76]

[§ 116] 9. Jurisdiction or Authority in Respect of Proceeding or Matter[77]—a. Jurisdiction of Court—(1) In General—(a) At Common Law. At common law an indictment for perjury committed in a judicial proceeding must affirmatively show the jurisdiction of the court over such proceedings,[78] which may be done either by a direct allegation to that effect,[79] or by the allegation of facts from which the jurisdiction appears.[80] Where on the face of the indictment it appears that the court or judicial officer before whom the alleged perjury occurred did not have jurisdiction of the proceedings, the indictment is bad.[81]

[§ 117] (b) Under Statutes in General. Under the English statutes and similar statutes in this country,[82] declaring what shall constitute sufficient allegations in an indictment or information for perjury, it is not necessary expressly to state that the court had jurisdiction of the case in which the alleged false testimony was given, but an allegation that the court[83] or, according to some cases, the writ of summons in the action; and therefore an indictment for perjury committed in such an affidavit need not state that any action was pending. King v. Reg., 14 Q. B. 31, 68 ECL 31, 117 Reprint 13.

clerk of the court[84] had authority to administer the oath is sufficient. Under such a statute the view has been taken that a general statement as to jurisdiction is sufficient without reciting facts from which such jurisdiction appears.[85] In any event the indictment is sufficient if the jurisdiction and authority of the court fully and substantially appear from the facts set forth.[86] But in the absence of an allegation as to authority to administer the oath, or of any other allegation showing the jurisdiction of the court, the information is insufficient.[87]

[§ 118] (2) How Jurisdiction Acquired. While under the modern rules of pleading, an indictment which alleges the jurisdiction of the court in which the perjury was committed over the offense then on trial need not state whether jurisdiction was acquired by indictment or information,[88] formerly the rule was otherwise.[89]

Commission or authority. Notwithstanding under the present statutes it may not be necessary to show the commission or authority on which the jurisdiction of the court depends,[90] the view has been expressed that if there is an attempt to set out the commission it must be set out correctly.[91]

[§ 119] b. Organization and Authority of Grand Jury. The due organization or existence of the grand jury before whom the alleged perjury occurred should, according to some cases, be shown in a prosecution for perjury[92] or statutory false swearing[93] by direct and positive averments,[94] although the view has been taken that all the facts showing due organization or existence need not be set out.[95] Although under some statutes the rule may be otherwise,[96] the view has been taken that it should appear that the investigation, in connection with which the testimony on which the charge is based was given, was one which the grand jury had authority to make,[97] and that, where it appears on the face of the indictment that the investigation was not within their authority, the indictment is insufficient;[98] but the want of authority need not be negatived.[99]

[§ 120] c. Authority of Ministerial or Legislative Officer or Board. The view has been taken that an indictment for perjury in a proceeding before a ministerial officer or board need not allege the facts showing jurisdiction, if it charges that the officer or board was authorized to administer the oath.[1] So also, when the court can take judicial notice of

[a] Court of general jurisdiction.—It is not necessary in an indictment for perjury committed before a court of general jurisdiction to set out all the facts to show its jurisdiction; and it is sufficient to aver that it had authority to administer the oath. Eighmy v. Peo., 79 N. Y. 546.

[b] Territorial jurisdiction.—An indictment for perjury before a recorder in a criminal case need not show that the offense on the trial of which the perjury was committed was perpetrated within the jurisdiction of the recorder, in view of Code (1907) § 7161 form 81. [a] Allegation that a jury was waived in trial for a misdemeanor was unnecessary in order to show jurisdiction as the failure to waive did not affect jurisdiction. Peo. v. Ashbrook, 276 Ill. 382, 114 NE 922.

[b] Judicial notice.—The view has been expressed that, where an indictment in the same court in which the perjury was committed sufficiently sets forth the facts, the court may take judicial notice of its jurisdiction and authority to administer the oath, and it need not be alleged. the fact that the officer or board had jurisdiction of the proceeding in question, it is not necessary to show by facts stated or by a distinct averment that jurisdiction existed in the particular case.[2] Moreover, the failure specifically to allege that the officer or board which acted in the particular matter had jurisdiction or authority[3] or was legally organized[4] does not render the information bad where such authority or organization appears from the allegations made. On the other hand in various cases in which the jurisdiction of a particular body over certain proceedings or to investigate certain matters is special, it has been held that the facts showing such jurisdiction should be alleged.[5] Moreover, it has been held that an indictment for false swearing should show facts from which it will appear that the subject matter of an investigation was within the authority of the ministerial or legislative officers who made such investigation.[6] In any event, where it appears on the face of the indictment that the tribunal before which the trial, in which the alleged perjury was committed, occurred, did not have jurisdiction of the subject matter, the indictment is insufficient.[7]

[§ 121] 10. Authority To Administer Oath[8]—a. In General. In an indictment or information for perjury[9] or false swearing[10] the authority of the officer or other person to administer the oath must be set forth by proper averment; and, if this is not done, the indictment or information will be fatally defective.[11]

Form and method of alleging authority. The authority may be set out by an express averment that the officer had authority,[12] or by setting out such facts as make it judicially appear that he had such authority.[13] Where such facts are alleged, the view usually taken is that the formal allegation of authority is unnecessary.[14] Where such facts are alleged and also the general authority of the officer to administer an oath, it is not necessary specifically to allege that he had authority to administer the oath in the particular proceeding.[15] There is, however, authority for the view that the circumstance under which an oath was administered should have been set out in order to determine whether the officer who administered the oath had authority.[16]

[§ 122] b. How Authority Acquired. Under the modern statutes it is not necessary to set forth the commission or authority of the person or persons before whom the perjury was committed,[17] the statement that such person had authority being sufficient;[18] and this is the rule in some jurisdictions even in the absence of statutory regulation in this regard.[19] An indictment charging false swearing during an examination by a magistrate to ascertain who has committed a certain offense is not defective for failure to allege the issuance of a summons for the examination since the issuance of the summons is not necessary to authorize the magistrate to administer the oath.[20] Where the authority to administer the oath depends upon certain ordinances, it is not necessary to set forth such ordinances in hæc verba.[21]

Surplusage. Allegations as to the source of authority which add nothing to the actual authority of the officer to administer the oath may be rejected as surplusage.[22]

[§ 123] 11. Description or Identification of Court or Tribunal Having Jurisdiction. The indictment or information must correctly designate or describe the court or tribunal before which the alleged perjury was committed[23] by setting forth the name or style of such court.[24] But there is authority for the view that the mere fact that the description is not in the words of the statute creating the court does not render the indictment bad where judicial notice may be taken in respect of what court was intended.[25] Moreover, it is not necessary directly to allege before what board the proceeding was conducted where that fact clearly appears from the averments made.[26] The person holding the court need not be named,[27] although it is not error to give the name of such person.[28]

Surplusage. Certain minor defects in the description of the court have been disregarded as surplusage.[29]

[§ 124] 12. Description of Person Who Administered Oath. Although under the statutory form of indictment prescribed in some jurisdictions it may not be necessary to show by whom the oath was administered,[30] the general rule is that the indictment or information should, by proper designation, show by whom the oath was administered,[31] and the omission of such showing is fatal.[32]

Naming officer. While such designation may call for an averment of the name of such officer,[33] it is generally held that, where the offense was committed in a judicial proceeding, it is not necessary to name the officer before whom the false oath was taken,[34] designating the court being considered sufficient;[35] and where the court or presiding judicial officer acts through another in administering the oath, an averment that the oath was administered by the court or by the presiding judicial officer is sufficient.[36]

Official title. The view has been taken that the official title of the officer administering the oath need not be set forth;[37] but there is authority to the contrary.[38]

Perjury before grand jury. An indictment for perjury before the grand jury need not allege the name of the foreman.[39]

[§ 125] 13. Administration and Making of Oath[40]—a. In General. An indictment or information for perjury[41] or false swearing[42] must show that accused was sworn in the proceedings in which the false testimony was given. Where perjury is assigned in swearing to an affidavit, the indictment must allege that accused made the affidavit in question.[43] The indictment is bad where it appears on the face thereof that the oath administered was not a lawful oath.[44]

[§ 126] b. Sufficiency of Averments. It has frequently been stated in general terms that the fact that accused was sworn should be alleged directly and positively, and not by way of inference or recital;[45] but the courts under modern rules of procedure have not in some instances held the prosecution strictly to this requirement.[46] Moreover, an averment that the oath was taken "before" the officer who administered it has been regarded as sufficient.[47]

As to form and manner of administration. Under the modern practice it is not necessary to allege in what particular form accused was sworn to testify,[48] and an averment which describes an oath which is in substantial compliance with the applicable statute is sufficient.[49] It has been held that it is sufficient to allege that accused was "duly sworn,"[50]

[a] In California (1) because of the wording of a particular statutory definition of "perjury," it has been held that there should be a showing that accused had been sworn to testify, disclose, or certify truly. Peo. v. Simpton, 133 Cal. 367, 65 P 834. (2) But an indictment, alleging that accused was duly sworn before the superior court that the evidence he should give should be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, charges that accused was sworn to testify truly. Peo. v. Bradbury, 155 Cal. 808, 103 P 215. (3) An indictment charging that a specified officer administered an oath to accused and that the oath was that accused would testify to the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, although not precisely in the form prescribed by the code, was held sufficient. Peo. v. Collins, 6 Cal. A. 492, 92 P 513. (4) In a prosecution under Pen. Code § 118a, was solemnly sworn,[51] or that the oath was administered in due form of law,[52] or that a lawful oath was administered,[53] provided, according to some cases, the indictment states the circumstances under which the oath was required and the occasion on which it was made, so as to show that its violation was perjury.[54] According to some cases, in the absence of the words of the oath, there should be an averment that accused was "duly sworn" or words of equivalent import,[55] although the view has been taken that the failure to allege in a prosecution for false swearing that accused was "duly" sworn is not fatal.[56] The failure to aver whether the oath was administered in person or through an interpreter does not render the indictment insufficient.[57]

[§ 127] 14. Setting Forth False Statement. While the indictment or information should in some form set out the statement or testimony alleged to be false,[58] and, where necessary, should show that the testimony or statement is one on which perjury may be predicated,[59] under the English statutes, and similar statutes in this country, it has been held that it is not necessary to set out the exact language used by accused, it being sufficient to allege the substance and effect thereof.[60] But the charge should at least set forth the substance of the false testimony,[61] and not merely the conclusion of the pleader or the meaning of the testimony;[62] and, according to some cases, it should set forth the false testimony as nearly as possible in the language of accused.[63] In any event it may properly set forth the exact language.[64] It is not necessary to set out the whole of the false matter;[65] such parts as are alleged to have been false and are material are all that are required.[66] Nor is it necessary to set forth the questions in answer to which the perjury is charged to have been committed;[67] nor to show whether the false testimony was given in answer to a specific question[68] or in the course of accused's narrative of the facts.[69] The allegations should clearly identify the false testimony on which the charge is based.[70] Moreover, the matter alleged to be false must be set out sufficiently and with such particularity as to inform the court and accused of the particular offense charged.[71] and based upon the making of a false affidavit to be used to obtain a new trial in a criminal case, an information, failing to allege that defendant first took the oath to testify or depose truly, was not defective for that reason. Peo. v. Teixeira, 59 Cal. A. 598, 211 P 470.

[b] In Florida an allegation that accused was "duly sworn according to law" is a sufficient allegation that he was "lawfully required to depose the truth," as used in the statute defining "perjury." Settles v. State, 75 Fla. 296, 78 S 287.

[c] Failure to allege that oath was administered.—An indictment alleging that that defendant was "duly sworn" is not objectionable on the ground that it does not charge the oath to have been administered by any one. State v. O'Hagan, 38 Iowa 504.

51. Ruch v. State, 111 Oh. St. 580, 146 NE 67.

[a] Concise allegations.—While it is permissible to set out in detail the alleged false testimony on which the perjury is predicated, such testimony should be concisely alleged in order to avoid confusion on the part of the judge and jury. Higgins v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 433, 97 SW 1054.

Perjury assigned upon written instrument. Where perjury is assigned on an affidavit or other written instrument, it is necessary that the instrument be set out in some form.[72] Ordinarily, however, it is not necessary to set forth a copy,[73] but it is sufficient to allege the substance and effect thereof,[74] and to set forth only the matter which is claimed to be false and material.[75] However, in some jurisdictions by virtue of statute, an exact copy must be set out.[76] A partial misdescription of the instrument involved does not necessarily render the indictment insufficient[77] or show that it is based upon another instrument which would correspond to such misdescription.[78] The mere fact that the affidavit set forth contains contradictory statements does not render the indictment bad.[79]

[§ 128] 15. Materiality of False Statement[80]—a. In General. Materiality being an element of the offense,[81] an indictment or information for perjury, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, must allege or show that the false statement on which the charge is based was material to the issue or matter involved,[82] or it will be fatally defective.[83] However, in upholding a form of indictment prescribed

76 Me. 64; Reg. v. Trudel, 14 Que. L. 193. See Carpenter v. State, 81 Tex. Cr. 298, 195 SW 199 (in an indictment based on testimony that another had signed an order for goods, before the grand jury investigating a charge of forgery against the witness, it is advisable to set forth the alleged forged order).

[b] Indictment for false swearing is within this rule. Yarberry v. Com., 209 Ky. 15, 272 SW 24 (a charge that accused falsely swore that he did not "abuse" or "threaten" another was too broad and general in its terms; the indictment, instead of using the words "abuse" or "threaten," should be more specific and set out the language constituting the abuse or conveying the threat).

by statute,[84] it has been held that a failure to allege, or to show by facts alleged, materiality is not fatal.[85] And, where under certain statutes defining the offense materiality is not an element,[86] a showing of materiality need not be made either in the case of perjury,[87] or of false swearing.[88]

Complete or partial materiality. There is authority for the view that the fact that some of the statements on which perjury is assigned are not material does not necessarily vitiate the indictment.[89] But a general statement of materiality is insufficient where part of the testimony set forth is immaterial.[90] It has also been held that the indictment must show the materiality of each of several distinct parts of the testimony, where perjury is assigned on each of such parts.[91]

Method and form of averment in general.[92] It has frequently been held or stated that the showing as to materiality may be made either by a general averment to that effect or by the allegation of facts from which its materiality will appear;[93] and hence, as hereinafter pointed out, where either method is used, the indictment or information is not bad for failure to use the other also,[94] and the sufficiency of indictments or informations in which both methods of showing materiality were used has been recognized.[95] In some jurisdictions the substance of the issues involved in the proceeding in which the perjury was committed must be set forth,[96] and the statutory provision that it shall be sufficient to give the substance of the controversy or matter in respect of which the perjury was committed has been construed by some courts to require a statement of the matter in issue in order that the court may see the materiality of the testimony.[97]

Materiality of inquiry or question. According to some cases the indictment should set forth the inquiry as to which the testimony which, it is alleged, is material, was given,[98] and that such inquiry was material;[99] and, where such averment is made, the indictment is insufficient if it appears on the face thereof that such inquiry or issue was not material.[1] There is authority for the view that the statement of the question involved may be made in the alternative or disjunctive.[2] The fact that the word "question" is used in referring to several distinct matters of inquiry is not fatal.[3]

[§ 129] b. General Averment of Materiality. It is sufficient to charge generally that the false statement was material to, or was in respect of, a matter material to the issue or inquiry, without setting out the facts from which such materiality appears.[4] But

[a] Form of averment.—When more than one question is relied on as material, it is usual to aver that certain "questions" became and were material, namely, whether, etc., "and" whether, etc., or "and also" whether, etc., but this form is not essential, and where the averment is that a "question" became material, several questions may well be set forth without a collective particle. Com. v. Johns, 6 Gray (Mass.) 274.

if it clearly appears from other averments that the statement was not material, a formal allegation of materiality will not save the indictment or information,[5] although, according to some cases, the fact that the testimony was not material must affirmatively appear in order to render the charge insufficient.[6]

Form and method of making general averment. In many jurisdictions an averment that the issue or matter concerning which the testimony was given was material, or a similar averment, is a sufficient and proper general allegation as to materiality.[7] But according to other cases an averment to the effect that a certain matter was a material inquiry or [a] In Georgia (1) in a case in the supreme court it was laid down that it is sufficient to charge generally that the testimony was in relation to a matter material to the point or question in issue. King v. State, 103 Ga. 263, 30 SE 30. See Goodwin v. State, 118 Ga. 770, 45 SE 620 (where an indictment was upheld in respect of materiality). (2) But it has been said that the statement in King v. State, supra is dictum. Herndon v. State, 17 Ga. A. 558, 87 SE 812. (3) It has been stated or held in cases in the court of appeals that it must appear how and wherein the testimony alleged to be false was in fact material to the trial of the issue when such testimony was given. Marion v. State, 21 Ga. A. 193, 94 SE 61; Sistrunk v. State, 18 Ga. A. 42, 88 SE 796; Herndon v. State, supra; Black v. State, 13 Ga. A. 541, 79 SE 173 (recognizing rule); Askew v. State, 3 Ga. A. 79, 59 SE 311. (4) But it is not essential that the materiality of the testimony should be demonstrated by an argument incorporated in the indictment. Ruff v. State, 17 Ga. A. 337, 86 SE 784.

State v. Ruddy, supra; State v. Shanks, 66 Mo. 560; State v. Keel, 54 Mo. 182; State v. Wakefield, 9 Mo. A. 326 [aff 73 Mo. 549].

[c] In Porto Rico (1) the text rule is recognized. Peo. v. Barbosa, 29 Porto Rico 433. (2) It is sufficient that the fiscal allege that such act is material or essential, and it is not necessary to state the act tending to show such materiality or essential character. Peo. v. Ayala, 13 Porto Rico 195. But see Peo. v. Colón, 10 Porto Rico 197 (where materiality did not appear). (3) But the information must allege, not only that false testimony is material, but also that it is material to some external situation, issue, or subject matter. See Peo. v. Barbosa, supra.

issue in the case,[8] or that the evidence was given on a material issue,[9] is not sufficient, but it must directly be alleged that the evidence given or assertion made was material.[10] A statement that an affidavit was "competent" evidence is not a sufficient allegation that it was material.[11] In any event the allegation as to materiality must refer to the testimony given.[12]

[§ 130] c. Averment of Facts Showing Materiality. Where it is apparent from the averments in the indictment or information that the statement charged to be false was material, it is not essential to state the legal conclusion by alleging that it was material.[13] A proper method in this regard is to set forth the issue and the testimony so that the court can see whether the testimony is material.[14] So also, where the averments as to the materiality of what is alleged to have been sworn falsely are defective, the indictment is nevertheless good, if such materiality sufficiently appears on its face.[15]

[§ 131] d. Competency of Testimony. An indictment or information for perjury need not show affirmatively that the alleged false testimony was admissible and competent, and could not have been excluded on any legal ground.[16]

[§ 132] 16. Assignment of Perjury[17]—a. Falsity—(1) In General. That part of the indictment or information which alleges the falsity of the statement is technically called the "assignment."[18] The assignment is of the substance or gist of the offense, and is not mere inducement.[19] Therefore, both at common law and under the statutes, it is necessary to negative the truth of the alleged false matter.[20] According to some cases the negation or denial must See Johnson v. State, 76 Ga. 790 (averments as to materiality of issue or inquiry held sufficient).

[a] In Illinois (1) ordinarily the allegation is in the form of one substantially to the effect that the particular matter, question, or inquiry as to which the testimony was given was material. See supra text and note 4. (2) A general allegation that the testimony was material to the issue has been held insufficient. Wilkinson v. Peo., 226 Ill. 135, 80 NE 699. But see Greene v. Peo., 182 Ill. 278, 55 NE 341 (where a general averment to the effect that accused gave certain evidence "in a matter material to the issue" was held sufficient). (3) Allegation as to "a material matter in issue" is equivalent to allegation as to "a matter material to the issue." Peo. v. Ashbrook, 276 Ill. 382, 114 NE 922. (4) Allegation as to "material question" has been upheld. Kizer v. Peo., 211 Ill. 407, 71 NE 1035.

[b] In West Virginia (1) it has been held that, where the perjury occurred in an ex parte proceeding, it was sufficient to allege that "it then and there became material to" accused to take a certain oath. Stofer v. State, 3 W. Va. 689. (2) But it has been laid down generally that the allegation that "it then and there became material to inquire" as to a certain matter is not a sufficient allegation that the testimony in question was material to the issue. State v. Aley, 94 W. Va. 529, 119 SE 549.

[c] Ascertainment of truth.—The usual form, when an express allegation of materiality is made, is to state that it became a material question whether such a thing happened or not. It is improper to state that it became material to ascertain the truth of what the witness stated. Peo. v. Collier, 1 Mich. 137, 139, 48 AmD 699; Reg. v. Goodfellow, C. & M. 569, 41 ECL 310. [a] Affidavit for new trial.—An indictment alleging that it was a material inquiry whether a certain person knew certain facts, and that defendant falsely swore that he heard such person tell another that such person did not know the facts in question, did not charge the materiality of the false oath. Rosebud v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 475, 98 SW 858.

be by a specific or particular averment,[21] and should designate the particulars wherein the matter sworn to was false,[22] at least where parts of the testimony or assertions of accused which are set out are evidently not false or may be true.[23] So a mere general averment of falsity of the testimony or assertions of accused has been regarded as insufficient,[24] and it has been asserted that the denial or traverse should not be indirect, argumentative, or implicit,[25] but according to some cases an indirect or argumentative denial or traverse does not necessarily render the charge insufficient,[26] and is regarded at most as a defect of form and not of substance;[27] and in general, under modern statutes and procedure the tendency is not to hold the prosecution with extreme strictness to technical rules where the averments are sufficient to give accused notice of the [a] An averment that accused "well knew" the reverse of the facts to which he testified, while not technically correct, is not fatally defective. State v. Marvel, (Del.) 131 A 313 [aff 131 A 317, 42 ALR 1058].

27. State v. Marvel, supra; Peo. v. Clements, 107 N. Y. 205, 13 NE 782.

[a] Rule applied to averments that defendant well knew that the facts were other than as stated by charge which he must meet.[28] But in any event averments in this regard must be sufficiently definite to apprise accused of the charge against him.[29]

In a prosecution for "false swearing" as defined by statute, the view has been taken that the charge should directly negative the truth of the testimony;[30] that a mere general averment as to falsity is not sufficient;[31] and that averments should show wherein the testimony or statement was false.[32] But it has been held that the traverse or denial is sufficient if it gives accused notice of the charge against him.[33]

An innuendo is that part of the charge which is inserted for the purpose of explaining the assertion or testimony which, it is alleged, is false;[34] and where there is doubt as to such meaning, the use of an innuendo is proper.[35]

"Falsely" swore or testified. In some of the cases, especially where the statutory definition contains the word "falsely," the view has been taken that it should be alleged that accused swore or testified "falsely."[36] There is, however, authority for the view that the charge is not fatally defective because the word "falsely" is omitted where equivalent words are used,[37] and where the statutory form was followed it has been held that the omission of the word does not render the indictment insufficient.[38]

[§ 133] (2) Setting Forth Truth. At common law and even under statutes regulating indictments and informations in some jurisdictions the assignment of perjury should set forth the truth by way of antithesis.[39] However, according to other cases, under modern rules of procedure, an indictment or information is not necessarily insufficient because it fails affirmatively to aver what the truth was.[40] In any event the form of averment in question may

[a] In Arkansas (1) certain of the earlier cases decided, however, after the enactment of the statute regulating indictments for perjury, laid down the strict rule that the particulars wherein the testimony or assertions of accused were false must be specifically pointed out. Harp v. State, 59 Ark. 113, 26 SW 714; Thomas v. State, 54 Ark. 584, 16 SW 568. See Thomas v. State, 51 Ark. 138, 10 SW 193 (as to effect of assignment following in all details the statement of the matter sworn to). (2) Later cases have taken a more liberal view and have upheld general averments of falsity. Smith v. State, 163 Ark. 223, 259 SW 404; Atkinson v. State, 133 Ark. 341, 202 SW 709; Davis v. State, 131 Ark. 542, 199 SW 902; Loudermilk v. State, 110 Ark. 549, 162 SW 569. (3) Moreover an indictment has been held not fatally defective although there was not strict conformity between the averment of matter falsely sworn and the traverse thereof. Cox v. State, 164 Ark. 126, 261 SW 303. (4) Other indictments held sufficient. Clower v. State, 151 Ark. 359, 236 SW 265; Blevins v. State, 85 Ark. 195, 107 SW 393.

[a] In the federal courts the cases are not in agreement. (1) In some the view has been taken that the truth must affirmatively be alleged. Bartlett v. U. S., 106 Fed. 884, 46 CCA 19; U. S. v. Pettus, 84 Fed. 791. (2) In other cases the view has been taken that such averment is not necessary if other averments are properly be used to point out the particulars wherein the testimony or assertions of accused were false,[41] and a like rule applies in a prosecution for false swearing.[42]

[§ 134] (3) Negativing Information or Belief. The indictment or information, when the testimony was given upon information, knowledge, and belief, must negative, not only the truth of the oath, but also the information and belief.[43] So where accused has testified as to his "belief," the "belief" should be negatived.[44] But where accused swore in respect of his belief as to a certain matter, it has been held that it is sufficient to negative his belief without negativing the matter itself.[45] Under the federal statute it should be alleged that accused did not believe that the matter to which he testified was true.[46]

[§ 135] b. Intent.[47] While it has been held that it is not necessary expressly to allege that there was an intention to testify falsely,[48] the indictment or information must show in some form that the alleged offense was committed with criminal intent in the case both of perjury[49] and of false swearing;[50] and accordingly the view usually taken is that the indictment or information should charge the testimony or assertion to have been "willfully"[51] and "corruptly"[52] false, at least where such words are a part of the statutory definition or description of the offense.[53] But there is authority to the effect that the word "willful" is not absolutely necessary in a charge of perjury,[54] even, according to some cases, where the statute defining the offense uses the word "willful" or "willfully,"[55] and that equivalent words, or words from which the willfulness may be implied, may be used.[56] Moreover, it has been held that it is not necessary to use the word sufficient to inform accused of the offense charged. Sharron v. U. S., 11 F. (2d) 689; U. S. v. Salen, 216 Fed. 420; U. S. v. Freed, 179 Fed. 236; U. S. v. Howard, 132 Fed. 325. See Ulmer v. U. [a] At common law.—Rex v. Cox, Leach C. C. 71, 168 Reprint 138.

[b] In Vermont an indictment which follows the form prescribed by statute is sufficient although the word "willfully" does not appear, since the word "perjury" is regarded as sufficient to include a charge that accused testified "willfully." State v. Camley, 67 Vt. 322, 31 A 840.

[c] In Canada an indictment which follows the statutory form is not insufficient because it omits the word "willfully," even though the statutory definition of "perjury" includes such word. Rex v. Morrison, 49 N. S. 446, 26 CanCrCas 26, 28 DomLR 113.

55. Blevins v. State, 85 Ark. 195, 107 SW 393; Williams v. Peo., 26 Colo. 272, 57 P 701.

56. Blevins v. State, 85 Ark. 195, 107 SW 393; Williams v. Peo., 26 Colo. 272, 57 P 701; State v. Spencer, 45 La. Ann. 1, 12 S 135.

[a] Thus (1) "feloniously" has been regarded as the equivalent of "willfully." Williams v. Peo., 26 Colo. 272, 57 P 701. (2) An averment that the testimony was feloniously, falsely, and corruptly given necessarily implied that it was willfully or intentionally given, especially where the indictment concluded with the statement "said testimony

"corruptly" where equivalent words are used,[57] or where the statutory definition does not contain the word "corrupt" or "corruptly."[58] But according to some cases the omission of both "willfully" and "corruptly" is never allowed.[59]

"Deliberately and willfully." Where the words "deliberately and willfully" are used in a statute defining the offense of perjury, those terms should be used in charging the offense.[60]

"Voluntarily." It has been held that the omission of the word "voluntarily" from an indictment for false swearing is not fatal where equivalent words are used.[61]

"Feloniously." Perjury being generally made a felony by statute, it is held in some cases that an indictment therefor must allege that it was "feloniously" committed.[62] Other cases, however, hold that the use of the word "feloniously" is unnecessary,[63] and that a charge in the words of the statute is sufficient.[64]

Negativing inadvertence or mistake. It is unnecessary to negative that the false statement or testimony was made through inadvertence, under agitation, or by mistake, where the statutory provision that a statement so made shall not constitute perjury is not a part of the statutory definition of the offense.[65]

[§ 136] c. Knowledge of Falsity or Recollection of Facts.[66] It has frequently been held or stated that an express averment of knowledge of falsity is not necessary to an indictment for perjury,[67] except where the false testimony is given on information and belief.[68] But according to some cases knowledge must expressly be alleged,[69] at least where knowledge of the falsity of the testimony given is made an element of the offense by statute,[70] as for example in the case of the statutory offense of false swearing.[71] In any event, under modern rules of pleading, no particular or stereotyped phrase is essential in charging the scienter of accused in perjury cases.[72]

[§ 137] d. Joinder of Assignments.[73] Several assignments of perjury may be contained in a single count of an indictment or information,[74] and in being wilfully and corruptly false." Blevins v. State, 85 Ark. 195, 107 SW 393.

57. State v. Anderson, 92 Iowa 764, 60 NW 630.

[a] Averments held sufficient.—Averment that defendant willfully and intentionally testified falsely, with intent to have the magistrate before whom he was giving his testimony act thereon. State v. Anderson, 92 Iowa 764, 60 NW 630.

[b] In Vermont (1) an indictment which follows the form prescribed by statute is sufficient although the word "corruptly" does not appear, since the word "perjury" is regarded as sufficient to include a charge that accused testified "corruptly." State v. Camley, 67 Vt. 322, 31 A 840. (2) But it has been held that, in an indictment for perjury in making oath to a chattel mortgage, an averment that the mortgage was not made to secure an honest debt, but "for some other purpose," does not sufficiently charge a wrongful motive in the execution of the mortgage. State v. Collins, 62 Vt. 195, 19 A 368.

Use of "feloniously" in indictment or information in general see Indictments and Informations §§ 247–250.

63. See infra text and note 64.

[a] In North Carolina (1) it is not necessary to use the term "feloniously" because such term does not appear in the statutory form of indictment. State v. Harris, 145 N. C. 456, 59 SE 115. (2) Earlier cases decided after the enactment of the statute prescribing such form took a contrary view. State v. Bunting, 118 N. C. 1200, 24 SE 118; State v. Shaw, 117 N. C. 764, 23 SE 246.

[b] Equivalent words.—The indictment need not be in the exact words of the statute, but other words conveying the same meaning may be used; and an indictment in the words of the statute, except for omission of the word "feloniously," is good, especially where it is also averred that the statements sworn to were false, and known to be so by the party making them. [b] In Minnesota, in a case in which the form prescribed by statute was followed, the words "willfully and corruptly false" were regarded as sufficient to include "knowingly," although the latter word was used in the statutory definition. State v. Stein, 48 Minn. 466, 51 NW 474.

[c] In Canada (1) where the statutory form is followed, knowledge need not be alleged. Rex v. Yee Mock, 6 Alta. L. 231, 21 CanCrCas 400, 13 DomLR 220, 4 WestWkly 1342. See Rex v. Morrison, 49 N. (2) It has been held that an indictment or charge in which it is alleged that accused committed perjury by falsely, willfully, and with intent to mislead the magistrate, swearing to a certain statement, involves a charge that accused knew such statement to be false and will not be quashed for failure more specifically to charge such knowledge. this connection the indictment or information may embrace in a single count all the particulars in which accused is alleged to have sworn falsely,[75] where the assignments relate to the same transaction;[76] but, according to some cases, each fact sworn to should be stated in distinct and separate assignments, and each traversed, so that if either assignment is proved, the indictment may be sustained.[77] It has been held, however, that it is improper to join in one count assignments as to several and independent perjuries.[78]

If one assignment of perjury is sufficient, an improper assignment in connection with it will not vitiate the indictment or information.[79]

Election. The state cannot be compelled to elect upon which separate statement it will proceed where the statements are closely connected and are dependent on one another.[80]

[§ 138] C. Issues, Proof, and Variance—1. In General. While it may not be necessary to prove a matter which does not constitute an element of the offense,[81] it is necessary, in accordance with rules elsewhere stated,[82] to prove all the constituent elements of perjury,[83] and in general the averments of the indictment or information and the proof must correspond;[84] and these rules apply in a prosecution for false swearing.[85] Strictness of proof is required in all matters which constitute the essence of the crime,[86] and a substantial variance in this regard is fatal;[87] but strict proof is not required as to immaterial averments,[88] or it has been stated, as to those which are not descriptive of the offense;[89] and a variance in respect of such matters is not fatal.[90] Certain variances considered material at common law by force of statute may be immaterial.[91]

Several counts. Where the indictment contains several counts, proof of guilt under any one of them is sufficient to warrant a verdict of guilty.[92]

Evidence admissible under pleadings. Under general rules[93] evidence is, of course, admissible to prove averments as to material facts.[94]

[§ 139] 2. Time of Making Statement. Under modern rules strict proof that the perjury charged was committed on the day alleged is not essential,[95] except when necessary to identify the record, deposition, or affidavit in which the oath was taken.[96] But there is authority for the view that, where an averment charges the alleged perjury as of the wrong term of court, the variance is fatal.[97] A charge based on oral testimony given in open court is not within the rule making the date material if the charge is based on a record.[98]

in Which Testimony Given. In order to sustain an indictment for perjury, there must be proof to identify the proceeding or matter in which, or in connection with which, the false testimony or assertion was given or made.[99] The description or identification must be proved substantially as laid;[1] and a substantial variance in this regard is fatal.[2] But an immaterial variance in respect of the description is not fatal,[3] and a like rule applies in a prosecution for the statutory offense of false swearing.[4] Under such statutes, if the identity of the proceeding is evident, and the purport thereof is given sufficiently to prevent any prejudice to accused, a variance will not be deemed material.[5]

[§ 141] 4. Jurisdiction of Proceeding in Which Testimony Given. The jurisdiction of the court or tribunal over the proceedings in which the alleged perjury was committed must be proved,[6] although it may not be necessary to prove how accused was brought before the court[7] or, in the case of a grand jury, to prove the steps preliminary to its organization.[8]

[§ 142] 5. Authority To Administer Oath. It is necessary to prove the authority of the officer who administered the oath,[9] and a material variance in this regard is fatal.[10] Under an averment that the officer was authorized and empowered by law to administer the oath, the facts essential to his authority to administer it may be shown.[11]

[§ 143] 6. Description of Court or Tribunal in Which Testimony Given. The description of the court in which the perjury was committed must be substantially proved as averred,[12] and a material variance in this regard is fatal.[13]

[§ 144] 7. Description of Person Who Administered Oath. The description of the person who administered the oath must be substantially proved as alleged,[14] and a material variance in this regard is fatal.[15] But proof that an oath was administered by the clerk, or some other officer of the court, will sustain an allegation that the person was sworn by the court, or in court.[16] Likewise a charge that the oath was administered in open court by a deputy clerk is sustained by proof that the oath was administered in open court by a person who was performing the duties of a deputy clerk.[17] Where the indictment specifically avers that defendant was sworn before a certain person, or a particular officer, such allegation must be proved as laid;[18] and proof that some other person or officer administered the oath is a fatal variance.[19]

[§ 145] 8. Administration, Form, and Making of Oath. It must, of course, be proved that an oath in some form was administered.[20] While it is not necessary that the indictment should set forth the form of the oath, it being sufficient to allege that defendant was duly sworn,[21] which latter allegation will permit the introduction of evidence as to the form of the oath,[22] it is usually held that if the form of the oath,[23] or the manner of administering it,[24] is set forth, the proof must correspond, and that a material variance in these matters is fatal.[25] The view has been taken that a variance in respect of the form of the oath,[26] or the method of administering it,[27] is not fatal.

[§ 146] 9. Matter Sworn To. The matter sworn to must be proved substantially as alleged,[28] and a material variance in this regard is fatal.[29] But it is not necessary to prove the exact words of the accused in giving the false testimony, it being sufficient to prove substantially what he said;[30] and it is not necessary that the proof as to the alleged false testimony shall correspond literally with the allegations of the indictment,[31] and a variance between the averment and proof in respect of immaterial matters is not fatal.[32] There is authority for the view that it is necessary to prove only that part of accused's testimony which is referable to the issue in respect of which perjury is assigned.[33]

In a prosecution for false swearing the exact words charged in the indictment need not be proved,[34] it being sufficient to prove the substance,[35] and if substantially proved any variance will be immaterial.[36]

Where perjury is committed in a written instrument, which is set forth in the indictment according to its tenor, it must be proved as laid, and a material variance is fatal.[37] But where the substance of an affidavit is set out in the indictment, a variance as to an immaterial assertion is not fatal.[38]

[§ 147] 10. Materiality of Statement. To sustain an indictment there must be proof that the false statement on which perjury is predicated was material to the issue or matter concerning which it was made,[39] at least where there is merely a general allegation of materiality and the information does not show on its face how the testimony was material,[40] unless by statute materiality is unnecessary.[41] According to some cases it must be proved that issue was joined in the case in which the testimony was given;[42] and where it is alleged that the perjury was committed upon the trial of an issue duly joined under a plea of not guilty, it must be proved that the testimony was given on an issue in the case;[43] and where the indictment sets out the identical issues to which the testimony was material, then the evidence offered must correspond with the averments of the indictment,[44] and must be confined to the point at issue;[45] but it is not necessary that there should be proof bearing directly on the main issue where the false testimony was material on a subordinate issue.[46]

[§ 148] 11. Falsity, Intent, and Knowledge. In order to sustain an indictment, there must be proof of the falsity of the testimony or assertion on which the perjury[47] or false swearing[48] is predicated, corresponding with the averments;[48½] and a material variance between the averments and proof in this regard is fatal;[49] but it is sufficient if the proof conform substantially to the charge.[50] Where the truth is alleged,[51] it has been held that it is necessary to prove it as alleged,[52] although there is authority to the contrary,[53] on the theory that allegations as to the truth are not necessary;[54] but it has been said that there need not be strict proof in respect of averments as to the truth,[55] and that an immaterial variance in this regard is not fatal.[56]

Knowledge and intent. Where willfulness,[57] knowledge and falsity,[58] or corruptness[59] are elements, such elements must be proved.

[§ 149] 12. Several Assignments or Statements. The view usually taken is that, where in an indictment there are several distinct assignments of perjury[60] or false swearing,[61] proof of any one of them is sufficient to support the indictment; and a like rule applies, according to some cases, in respect of a portion of one assignment.[62] But if the indictment is in one assignment, failure to prove all the statements substantially as alleged is fatal to the prosecution,[63] and it has been held that if a count undertakes to set out continuously the substance and effect of what defendant swore, it is necessary, in support of this count, to prove that in substance and effect he swore the whole of that which is thus set out as his evidence, although the count thereafter sets forth several distinct assignments of perjury.[64] Where there are a number of allegations of perjury in one affidavit made by accused it is error to consider each charge separately, without reference to the other allegations in the affidavit.[65]

[§ 150] D. Evidence*—1. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. As in other criminal prosecutions,[66] the burden is on the state to establish every essential element of the crime charged,[67] such as the facts that accused was sworn,[68] that he was sworn in a matter where an oath was authorized or required by law,[69] that the oath was administered by a person having authority to do so,[70] that accused swore willfully and corruptly[71] to that which was false,[72] and that the swearing was as to a material matter.[73] In the absence of evidence to the contrary it will be presumed that the oath was properly administered,[74] and that the proceedings were regular.[75] The materiality of the matter sworn to cannot be left to presumption or inference;[76] nor is there any presumption as to its truth or falsity.[77] By statute in some jurisdictions falsity of his testimony may be established presumptively by sworn written statements made by accused to the contrary.[78]

After a prima facie case has been established, the burden rests on accused to show that the falsity of his testimony was occasioned by surprise, inadvertence, or mistake, and did not proceed from a corrupt motive on his part.[79]
